PROVIDENCE — A 19-year-old woman whose car allegedly struck a Mount Pleasant High School teacher, who later died, reported the incident to the police almost two hours later.

Anne-Marie Dansicker, 53, was hit around 5 p.m. Wednesday as she was walking away from the school on Mount Pleasant Avenue, and the driver, Tarchae Powell of Providence, fled the scene, the police said.

The police said Powell went to police headquarters at about 6:40 p.m. and told officers she was driving the car in the accident. She was charged with due care by operator and failure to yield the right of way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk, the police said.

Dansicker was transported to Rhode Island Hospital, where she later died, the police said.

"A request was made to the Rhode Island attorney general's office to conduct a review of this case," the police stated.

"Our thoughts and prayers are with Anne-Marie's loved ones and countless members of the Providence school community whose lives she touched during her years of service," Superintendent Chris Maher wrote in a statement.

Debbie Krous, a Providence school teacher, wrote about her colleague on her Facebook page. "Anne was a kind, gentle woman who loved teaching and always put the children first," she wrote. "We pray for the strength her family needs to get through this tragedy now. May her memory be a blessing."
