MAX GOLD DWARES, 20, of 60 Packard St., a student at Rhode Island College, Providence, died yesterday at Hasbro Children's Hospital, Providence, after an illness.

Born in Providence, a son of Kevin D. and Barbara R. (Gold) Dwares, he had lived in Providence before moving to Cranston 18 years ago.

A 2001 graduate of both Cranston West High School and the Harry Elkin Midrasha, he had been attending Rhode Island College.

He was a member of Temple Emanu-El, Providence, and Temple Am-David, Warwick, and was involved with many programs at both temples.

A member of VICA and a volunteer for the Tomorrow Fund at Hasbro Children's Hospital and Travelers Aid, he once made 1,555 peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwiches in a day.

He wrote for the Rhode Island College newspaper, and was writing his biography with author Lev Poplo. His battle with leukemia had been chronicled in a number of Providence Journal columns.

Besides his parents, he leaves a brother, Jacob Gold Dwares, at home; and his paternal grandmother, Shirley Gold Dwares, and his maternal grandparents, Sumner and Estelle Gold, all of Warwick.

A funeral service will be held today at 2 p.m. in Temple Am-David, 40 Gardiner St., Warwick. Burial will be in Lincoln Park Cemetery, Warwick.
