Pawtucket native Edward L. Goldman Sr., whose Navy service during the Vietnam War included working for the chief of naval operations at the Pentagon, died Monday after an accident in his home in Quincy, Mass. He was 75.

Goldman, who retired from the Navy as a lieutenant, was a graduate of La Salle Academy, Brown University and Georgetown Law School. He worked on President Lyndon B. Johnson's Pennsylvania Avenue Commission, charged with revitalizing that Washington, D.C., street, which is the home of the White House.

During the 1970s, Goldman worked for Sperry Univac, the computer company, eventually becoming a director and general counsel. He also held the title of chief lobbyist. He served on President Reagan's 1981 Task Force on Trade with Nonmarket Economies, advising the administration on global commerce.

In the 1980s, Goldman served in several different capacities with a number of technology companies, including Apollo Computer and the EMC Corp. He lived and worked in Europe and Asia.

Goldman retired to Quincy in the late 1990s, but kept active with his boat and as a consultant. Goldman was the husband of Margret Branschofsky; the father of five children and two step-children, and he had four grandchildren. He is also survived by a brother and sister.
