Ex-R.I. woman fatally injured crossing street

Obituary, Page C-12

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. — A former Providence woman was injured fatally Friday while crossing a city street during the afternoon rush hour, according to police.

Deborah Temkin Green, 49, who had lived in Framingham for many years, was pronounced dead at Framingham Union Hospital after resuscitation efforts failed.

Police said she was struck on Concord Street by a car driven by Elizabeth Ropi, 66, of Framingham. They said several witnesses told them that Green stepped into the path of the car. They said no charges would be lodged.

The victim was the sister of Joan Slafsky, head of the Rhode Island School of Design's news bureau.
