MARCUS, Marshall

MARSHALL B. MARCUS

Marshall B. Marcus, 52, of 35 Lafayette Street, Pawtucket, prominent Jewish leader and chief counsel for the board of review of the State Department of Employment Security since 1940, died Sunday.

A member of the Providence law firm of Winograd, Winograd and Marcus, he was active for many years in Democratic politics in the Ninth Ward of Providence. He lived on Ruskin Street before moving to Pawtucket several years ago.

Born in Providence on Feb. 9, 1911, he was the son of Lyon A. Marcus and the late Mabel (Phillips) Marcus. He was graduated from Classical High School in 1928. He graduated with the Class of 1932 at Brown University, where he was a James Manning Scholar, and was admitted to Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year.

He was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1935 and was admitted that year to the Rhode Island Bar. He began practicing law in the office of Max Winograd and later became a partner in the firm.

Mr. Marcus was president of Temple Beth Israel in Providence and also was president of the Temple's Men's Club. In 1956 he received a citation from the Jewish Theological Seminary of America for his contribution to Jewish causes.

Recently he was elected president of the New England members' group of the Commercial Law League of America. He was also a member of the Pawtucket Bar Association, the Toastmasters Club of Rhode Island and active in the Narragansett Council, Boy Scouts of America.

For several years he had been chairman of the Rhode Island Bar Association's committee on unauthorized practice.

Besides his father, he is survived by his wife, Charlotte (Long) Marcus; two sons, Michael and David Marcus, and a brother, Stanley R. Marcus, of Silver Springs, Md.

Funeral services were held Feb. 25 at Temple Beth Israel. Burial was in Lincoln Park Cemetery.
