ROUSLIN, ALBERT

ALBERT ROUSLIN, 84, of New York, a former anthropological and teacher, died yesterday in Amsterdam Nursing Home.

He was the husband of Elisabeth (Onslow-Ford) Rouslin. Born in Providence, he was a son of the late Benjamin and Jeannette (Radis) Rouslin.

He was educated in Providence schools and attended the former Rhode Island State College, now the University of Rhode Island, and graduated from the University of Chicago.

Mr. Rouslin's anthropoligical studies focused on the Tarascan people in the Yucatan Peninsula of Mexico. He lived among the Tarascans, working out of the anthropology department of Columbia University in New York City. His papers on the Tarascans are part of the collection of the Museum of Natural History in New York.

He taught science for a brief time at Rocky Hill School, Warwick, during the 1950s, and taught in Charlotte-Amalie on the island of St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands. He also was a newspaper editor in Beaufort, S.C.

Besides his wife, he leaves a son, Max Rouslin of Asheville, N.C.; three brothers, Samuel Rouslin of Warwick, Edward Rouslin of Barrington and William Rouslin of Cincinnati; and a sister, Joan Fistick of Tampa, Fla.

A memorial service is being planned. PJ 12-1-2000
