pointed that the Board of Elections had locked all voting machines before he was invited to see them.

While expressing satisfaction that he has been given a top lever and a good position on the machines, he said he had hoped to be able to test at least "three or four" of the machines to make sure that his party lever and individual lever were in working order.

Moses spoke yesterday at open air rallies in front of the Nicholson File Company and on Eagle Street in front of the U. S. Rubber Company.

He told his auditors that "a vote for Moses is a vote for the direct primary." He said that if elected, he would undertake to cut the tax rate by $2 per $1000 by elimination of unnecessary bureaus and high paid personnel in the city government. He advocated elimination of the Bureau of Police and Fire and reduction of the Board of Canvassers to one man, as well as cuts of "high-paid unnecessary personnel" in other departments.

Moses said that as mayor he would be able to save water users 20 per cent on their water bills and would reduce the interest charged on overdue taxes from eight per cent to 1½ per cent. He also said he favored permanent registration and was for all the referendum proposals on the ballot except that for parking meters.
