Tidbits and News of Jewish Personalities
By DAVID SCHWARTZ

A Xmas Gift

The best Jewish-Christmas story comes to me from Jewish publisher, Bloch. And it happens to be a perfectly unsynthetic story.

It was about three weeks before Christmas that a Jew came into Bloch's looking for a certain rather fancy "Siddur" (prayer book to you).

Bloch did not have it in stock, but assured the good Jew (for who but good Jews buy prayer books), that he would get it for him.

"All right," said the customer, "but be sure to get it at once, for I want it for a Christmas present."

The Oldest Jewish Book Store

Mr. Bloch, by the way, was seventy years young the other day, and the Free Synagogue Executive Council gave him a dinner to celebrate the occasion.

That was a good idea—for to the average Jew, the name Bloch has come to be so much a synonym of Jewish publishing and book selling, that he forgets that there is a living person behind it. And Mr. Bloch is very much living, despite the alleged weight of seventy years. He attributes his youthfulness to a rare cause, "overwork."

From 9 to 7 every day, Bloch is at his shop, as his elders were before him—since 1854.

Bloch and Isaac M. Wise

1854! That's a long time ago. Six years before Lincoln was President, there was already a Jewish book store in America. Lincoln, himself, for all one may know, may have read of the books—at least a Bible sold by Bloch, for Bloch is a nephew of Isaac M. Wise, who was a frequent visitor at the White House when Lincoln was President.

Lincoln, his law partner said, was not a great reader, as readers are reckoned these days. Nor was he a great reader, even as Thomas Jefferson or James Madison was. But Lincoln did read the Bible. His addresses are all saturated with the Bible.

Masters and Lincoln

I do not sympathize with the general trend of Edgar Lee Masters in his attack on Lincoln, but in one thing, Masters is surely right. Masters continually calls Lincoln the "Hebraic-Puritan." Constantly, he throws that term at him, as a reproach. Well, I think Lincoln was "Hebraic-Puritan," too, but I see no reproach in it. It was that, rather, which constituted his greatness, and if Masters were to analyze better his own mental processing, he would perhaps admit it himself.

For Masters himself, while attacking Lincoln on all sides, stands in awe at the First Inaugural Address, the Gettysburg addresses, and other of the presidential utterances. And it was just these things, which were paramountly Hebraic-Puritan. Masters prefers the Greek spirit.

I dare say, any child reading the First Inaugural would proclaim that it was more indebted to the Hebraic-Puritan than to the Greek spirit. And even Mr. Masters does not attempt to deny distinction to the First Inaugural.

When Ochs Married

But we were talking about Mr. Bloch. Let's go back to him. I said, he is a nephew of the late Isaac M. Wise, which must make him a relation of Adolph S. Ochs—a cousin, to be exact.

Bloch reminisced the other day on the years long ago, when Ochs and Bloch were young men.

JULIUS ROSENWALD, AMERICAN JEWISH LEADER, DEAD AT 69

Passing Causes Deep Sorrow; Gifts in Lifetime Totalled in Excess of $50,000,000

Chicago, Jan. 8—(JTA)—Julius Rosenwald, outstanding Jewish leader, American philanthropist and pioneer in the scientific application of philanthropy, passed away Wednesday afternoon at 2:55 at his home in Ravinia at the age of 69.

Mr. Rosenwald had been ill since the spring from a kidney ailment, heart disease and hardening of the arteries, and his illness took a critical turn last week when his children, Lessing J. and William of Philadelphia, Mrs. Adele Levy of New York and Mrs. Edgar Stern of New Orleans were summoned to his bedside. A third daughter, Mrs. Alfred K. Stern, lives in Ravinia. Only once in the two days prior to his death were Mrs. Rosenwald and the children permitted to see him owing to his weakened condition and the fear that their presence would unduly alarm him.

Mr. Rosenwald was the greatest Jewish philanthropist since the days of Baron de Hirsch. His benefactions were in excess of $50,000,000 and were limited neither by geographical boundaries nor by barriers of race, color or creed.

In the annals of philanthropy, Mr. Rosenwald occupied an outstanding place not only because of the generosity of his donations but because of the far reaching application of his benefactions and the compulsion he placed upon others to give.

He set a new standard for philanthropy when, in establishing the Roin the territorial and social structure of the Jewish people.—Editor's Note.

Two processes of development during the last century most clearly characterize the Hebrew people: the change of their habitation and that of re-arrangement. The result of the former is expansion and concentration and the consequence of the latter is the appearance of new classes and their differentiation. Both processes started at the same time and continued to influence each other considerably. The whistle of the first locomotive in 1825 was the herald not only of the future exploration of new parts of the world previously unsuspected and undreamed of in the history of human progress and the amassing of material and cultural treasures, but also the forerunner of the approaching change in the life in the then small Jewish people, their rapid increase and expansion over the entire world and their penetrating social transformation.

The enormous, quantitative growth of the Jewish people, the like of which is not to be found in Jewish history, the disappearance of the Polish agrarian feudal systems, the abolition of serfdom in the whole of Eastern Europe, the rapid rise of capitalism in the middle and Eastern Europe through which new sources of industry and occupation appeared, but particularly the vanishing of the role of the middleman by means of which the majority of the Jewish people found their source of existence—all these events and happenings induced large masses of Jews to change their geographical abodes and their social adjustment, compelled them also to look for new places in the world and to secure new occupations in society.

The revolution in technique and industry, which entirely changed the appearance of the world in the course of the 19th century, creating new, unexpected means of transportation, establishing connections between the remotest countries of the world thus removing the center of industrial life from the flat country places to the cities and transforming the city classes—the chief element in the making of human history—those revolutions at the same time also caused the spread of the Jews over the entire globe, their settlement in cities and their concentration in denser masses. While some of the old Jewish classes rose to a point of becoming dominant groups, others experienced oppression and exploitation. This extraordinary settling in the cities also offered many opportunities for various activities in financial and commercial fields in which the Jews had a considerable amount of experience and after many centuries during which the Jewish people led the life of a wandering middle-class nation among the settled peasant populations, they found themselves at last in the 19th century in their right element and proper sphere of activity. Their sources of income and occupation, on account of which they were forced to endure innumerable annoyances and abuses, became, in the new order of economy, very important national and state functions.

Formerly an exile, the Jew now felt at home, entitled to live and to create, to possess and to struggle, like the newly risen classes of the world whom he joined and whose fate he shared. This feeling of being at home and enjoying equality was particularly appreciated by the newly arisen proletarian urban Jewish classes who grew up with the similar classes of the surrounding races and together with them had to overcome the difficulties of development from despised outcasts to an organized, fighting and self-respecting class, cherishing new social ideals. This sentiment of civil and class equality could only originate in the atmosphere of the modern, urban society, in the activities of which the Jews fully participated.

Such feeling was impossible in former times when they lived on the farms of feudal landlords or in the peasants' villages in the midst of those primitive economic organizations which virtually separated them from the rest of the world.

And, though occasionally under special circumstances, the Jew could

Samuel M. Magid Always an Optimist

Now Preparing For Opening of Jewish Home for the Aged; Says Next Great Need for Providence Is New Jewish Community Center

By JOSEPH M. FINKLE

This is the first in a series of articles about Jewish men and women who are taking an active interest in the affairs of the community. The writer believes that the readers of The Jewish Herald will be interested in the earlier life and background of our prominent Jewish leaders. These articles will appear from time to time in The Jewish Herald.

With the beautiful new Jewish Home for the Aged, fast approaching completion, and its formal dedication scheduled for the early spring, thereby adding another link to the finely equipped Jewish institutions of which Rhode Island may boast with justifiable pride, I believed this would be an opportune time to speak and learn more about a man whose activities have had as much to do with the success of this undertaking as that of any other individual in Rhode Island, namely, Samuel M. Magid.

Unlike many other prominent men of the state, Mr. Magid is really an adopted son of Rhode Island because he has been a resident of Providence but since 1915 and in these 17 years, has caused his name to be indelibly inscribed in the hearts of rich and poor alike by the great part he has taken in every worthwhile endeavor of the community.

His philanthropic works here are but a continuation of his activities in Boston, where he was one of the founders and Presidents of the Young Men's Hebrew Association and a founder and director of the magnificent Beth-Israel Hospital. He was also a director of the Federated Jewish Charities, and a member of a special committee with Louis D. Brandeis on War Relief. His success in business can be matched in the same way as with every community enterprise in which he has been associated.

"I have always been an optimist and I still am," Mr. Magid told me, and this possibly symbolizes the man. "Having been through two other depressions and now going through a third, I still have faith in my country, my religion and my people and I know we will all emerge soon to a happier and more prosperous day than ever before."

Mr. Magid's life story reads like many other successful men who by great sacrifice and hard work, have risen to the forefront of their professions. At a testimonial dinner given in honor of his fiftieth birthday last month, Jew and Gentile testified to the esteem in which he is held by the people of Rhode Island.

The eighth in line of nine children, Samuel Magid first saw the light of day on Dec. 10, 1887, in the small city of Poniewitz, Lithuania, where his father was a brewer and made the most famous beer in the Kovno section. At the age of four, his family, because of oppressive conditions, moved to Palestine, being amongst the first Zionist settlers there. After two years, the family returned to Lithuania. Hearing of the great opportunities in America for his brood of children, the elder Magid sailed with his family for this country. After living one year in New York City, they moved to Haverhill, Mass., where the business life of Sam began after spending a year in an American school.

Mr. Magid looks back with pride to his first commercial venture. Fitting himself with white gloves and a large tin canteen, he became a candy "butcher," visiting the shoe factories of Haverhill and selling the factory workers his line of penny candies. In this endeavor, he was successful as may be realized by his weekly earnings of from $12 to $15, which in those days was a good sum, even for a mature man. These earnings contributed greatly to the support of his family.

Of course, not being content to always pursue the calling of a candy "butcher," Sam and his family removed to Boston, having heard of this great city and its large Jewish population and in 1898, accepted his first position at the large salary of $2,600 a week in a wholesale drygoods and notions house. He was a stock boy and he resolved to learn as much of this business as he could with the thought of ultimately going on his "own." This he did one year later at the beginning of the Spanish-American War and then came his introduction to Providence.

War emblems were then in great demand and Providence, being a great jewelry center, brought Mr. Magid here on buying trips, little knowing then, what part this city would have in his future private and public life.

He bought an interest in a jewelry concern here, and began travelling the New England territory with headquarters in Boston, where his notion business was prospering. After a year's tourist trip in 1905, throughout the United States, Mexico, Cuba and the Hawaiian Islands, Mr. Magid developed a line of popular-priced jewelry and at the same time produced the famous Little Nemo ring, which really was the beginning of his specializing in the jewelry business and of the selling to large syndicate trade.

In 1913, during the financial depression, which also had greatly affected Mr. Magid's personal fortune, conditions were at their worst, but with the improvement of all business a little later, caused by the World War, the development of his business began with amazing speed. He had been commuting from Boston all these years and now, because of his growing manufacturing enterprises in Providence, he made his home here in 1915. He met here, his wife, the former Rose Brier, daughter of old time settlers, the late Abraham D. Brier and Rachael Brier, who is now living here. They are now blessed with three children, a son, Irving, a student at the Westminster School in Simsbury, Conn., and two daughters, Dorothy and Miriam.

Mr. Magid's greatest hobby is being at home with his family, but when away from them, the community is nearest to his heart. Of course, his keenest delight is in watching the construction of the new Jewish Home for the Aged building, of which he was chairman of the $150,000 successful campaign and now is chairman of the building committee. It is needless to enumerate the many days and nights that he is devoting to the successful completion of this project, at the expense of his health and private business, but this is another of his many hobbies.

Mr. Magid believes that Providence and Rhode Island will have the finest Jewish institutions of any city its size when the new Home is completed. He says that the next great need is a new Jewish Community Center, in a modern building full equipped, with swimming pool, gymnasium, club rooms, in fact a meeting place for all Providence Jewry.

For diversion, Mr. Magid plays golf and loves travelling. He spends several months in Miami, Florida, every year, and is interested in the civic affairs of that city.

Jewish young men have greater opportunities today than the youth of 20 years ago, believes Mr. Magid, because of the educational facilities available for those who are willing to grasp these opportunities.

I will summarize his other activities by just noting the offices he now holds: Vice President, Temple Emanu-El; Chairman, Building Committee of Temple Emanu-El; Director of the Jewish Community Center, Providence Zionist District and Legdement

One hundred and thirty-nine Christians and fifteen Moslems entered during the same period. There were eighty departures during December.

Rather a diversified and imposing list of offices, which have meant days yes, years of sacrifice and happy labor to Samuel M. Magid.

These are all in his conception of duty, and yes, I nearly forgot, Sam Magid also calls them his hobbies.

EDUCATION ASSN. VOTES GRANTS TO SCHOOLS

New York, Jan. 8—(JTA)—Fifty-five religious schools of Greater New York that applied to the Jewish Education Association for aid in the form of scholarship grants had their applications approved at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association, which took place recently at the Jewish Club.

The total number of schools which will receive such scholarship aid, it was stated by Bernard Semel, Honorary Secretary of the association, will amount to approximately 70. Nearly all the schools, Mr. Semel explained, are Talmud Torahs or Jewish Religious Schools which conduct their sessions after public school hours.

The scholarship grants are to defray the cost of tuition for pupils whose parents are too poor to pay. To obtain approval, the standard of each of the schools with respect to physical equipment, sanitary and other safety conditions, as well as the employment of licensed teachers, were examined by a sub-committee, headed by Jacob Wener, a Vice President of the association, on whose recommendation approval was voted by the board.

ALIEN CORN

The Jewish problems have been subjects of discussion for many centuries. Literature is full of what are supposed to be typical representations of the alien Jew among his Gentile fellows, many of them world-famous, as well as misunderstood. Shakespeare's Shylock is at once the outstanding picture in literature of the Jew, badgered, ridiculed and scorned, but a figure which assumes grand and tragic proportions in the play, making all the other characters pale and stupid in contrast, and, whether you will or not, he remains a splendid defense of the Jew and his right to justice in a distorted England.

In modern times, the Jew has begun to write his own characterizations. Ludwig Lewisohn is well known to all classes of reader for his earnest attempt to assert his racial consciousness, and to discover a solution for the ever present problem offered by the solidity and separateness of the Jewish race. Other writers are not so earnest, neither are they so impressive. Ben Hecht has been willing to use the character of a Jew for a base and vicious portrait.

Much more interesting than any other piece of modern fiction is a story by Somerset Maugham, included in his last book, "First Person Singular." In this story he attempts to present the situation met by an intelligent, wealthy, cultured Jewish family in England, which desires to obviate its Jewishness and become an honored, accepted unit of English society. Having achieved a baronetcy, the father has one son for whom he dreams of a seat in the House of Lords. The son determines, however, to study music, for which he believes he has real genius. This outcropping of the Semitic temperament in his son almost brings the world falling down on the ears of both father and mother. In the end, his ambition unrealized, his passion for artistic completion frustrated, the son commits suicide.

This story speaks for itself. The Jews are alien corn everywhere, no matter how carefully, no matter how zealously they attempt to assimilate Gentile habits and customs. Somerset Maugham is enough a student of human nature to realize how devoid of color and individuality the Jew becomes when he has divested himself of his racial heritage. Yet, he is also keenly aware of the tragedy that must come about through a shallow assimilation. The Jew, in his own environment, with his own genius, and with his love of a vivid, emotional sincerity in living, is a brilliantly colorful and interesting phenomenon in human personality; but without these things, he becomes a misfit in society, artificial, uninteresting and cold. He has lost his identity.

The lesson is there. We Jews must keep the richness and sweetness of our heritage intact. We must guard our identity as we would the greatest treasure of our souls. We are alien corn in any other world. We are frustrate in any work that robs us of the highest realization of our intrinsic personality. That is why the Jew has so important a problem. He is torn between the destruction of his personality and the ire of a mad world. And his solution, whatever it will be, has a thorn and pain with it.

By the Way

Tidbits and News of Jewish Personalities

"Do you remember when Ochs was married?" I asked.

"Yes," he replied, "and the most vivid image that comes to my mind of the event after so many years is that of a lady smoking."

"You may think the modern girls invented smoking, but this lady way back in those years at a wedding celebration was sitting and openly smoking a cigar. She was the wife of a Rabbi, too—Mrs. Sonnenschein."

"I recall that I gazed in amazement at the sight, but even today, were the wife of a Rabbi to indulge in a cigar at a wedding, it would probably cause a little titillation."

Overproduction of Rabbis

All the Jewish hospitals in New York, in fact, all of the hospitals in New York, regardless of denomination, I understand, have closed their nursing schools to further entries. Too many nurses, they say, and they must close to keep the present nurses from starving.

And maybe we shall have to close some of the Rabbinical schools, if some of the stories that I hear are true.

The other day, there appeared an advertisement for an Orthodox Rabbi. The position paid about $1500 a year. For so unremunerative a position, there were, nevertheless, no less than 80 applicants.

I am told, too, there are graduates of the leading Rabbinical schools of the country, who would be glad to take jobs at that salary.

A Foreign Accent

There is a good story they are telling, by the way, about a certain New York Rabbi who sought a position.

This poor fellow, whom we shall call Rabbi Samuelstein, because that is not his name, besides being out of a job, spoke with a foreign accent, and he was very much afraid that this would prevent him from getting a job.

"What is the chance of a Rabbi with a foreign accent, getting a post, when so many who speak the language, according to Hoyle, cannot get one?" So the Rabbi reasoned.

Well, one day the Rabbi received an invitation to preach a trial sermon at some congregation in Brooklyn. The Rabbi worked hard on that sermon. One of the sentences read: "If the Jew will adhere to his faith, he will reach the pinnacle of his glory."

Well, I told you, this Rabbi spoke with an accent, and when he pronounced his own sentence, it was like this: "If the Jew will adhere to his faith, he will reach the pinnocle of his glory."

The congregation as a whole was not too profoundly versed in English, but this sentence seemed less vague to them than the rest of the sermon. "He plays pinochle," they whispered one to another. "He must be all right," and so they elected him.

Jewish Young Men Assn. Elects Committees

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 3, the Jewish Young Men's Association held their first meeting of the month at the Jewish Center. Thirty members and 10 prospective candidates were present, making the membership the largest since its organization.

The President, Nathan Pass, chose the following members for the Executive Committee, who were approved by the members:

Edward Kleiner, Max Klibanoff, Simon Chorney, Louis Silverman and Milton Spitz.

The following members compose the Membership Committee: Chairman, Max Klibanoff; Bert Pickar, Louis Silverman, Sam Glassman, Jacob Dress and Edward Kleiner. This committee has complete charge of the admission of candidates and all Jewish young men over the ages of 19 years, desiring to join, are requested to submit their names to one of the aforementioned.

The Program Committee, consisting of Chairman Alec Gurwitz, Edward Kleiner, Harry Seagal, Jacob Dress and Norman Horowitz, will arrange all entertainments. A smoker is now being considered for the installation of the newly elected officers.

THE JEW CHANGES

be of some social service even then, he could never become organically connected with them, because of their peculiar and widely divergent arrangements. This peculiar social position brought about the tragic character of the Jewish existence, socially, politically and culturally, which cost the Jews many sacrifices and often threatened them with complete annihilation. Now, however, due to their constant increase among the city dwellers, the Jewish people have gradually become similar to their environment. However, the unfavorable opinions regarding them because of their former unfortunate occupation as small trades-people, usurers, owners of country inns and middlemen, did not disappear and they were therefore intensely hated by the peasant populations, as can be seen from the historical records of the Polish and Ukrainian inhabitants.

The Jew was therefore compelled to remain in his closed circle. In Germany his fate was not so tragic on account of the more favorable position of German people generally who were culturally superior to East European nations, due to their early abolition of the feudal system. The social changes and economic development, which took place in the last century, induced the Jewish people to divest themselves of their pecuniaries and join the peoples among whom they were living. They also began taking active interest in the social and political institutions of their environment.

Whilst, it is true that in some respects there still exists a certain amount of exclusiveness and some social barriers are not lacking even in our time, the sharp edge of discrimination, which was prevalent in former times, is now removed.

It must also be recorded that the favorable industrial and social changes are to a large extent responsible for the general improvement of the Jewish situation, and greatly contributed to the Jewish increase in population.

From a numerically insignificant people, numbering 3,000,000 a hundred years ago, scattered in a multitude of villages and small towns all over the face of the globe, the Jews now number about 16,000,000, having increased five-fold, spread over 60 states, while nearly one-third of their numbers live in the 15 greatest cities of the world where they share the life about them. Never before have the Jewish people been so rich in numbers. This remarkable increase of the Jews during the last century establishes the fact that under the influence of the new favorable conditions of life, the biological energy of the Jewish people has begun to show new fruits. And this happened in a perfectly normal manner: not through a higher birth rate, but in consequence of a considerably diminished mortality.

Now, however, the greatest problem which confronts the Jewish people is that of conservation, for a certain amount of assimilation with and absorption by their respective environments is almost unavoidable. Small Jewish congregations particularly are threatened with disintegration. While formerly small Jewish settlements among the primitive peasant population and under the feudal systems could manage to preserve their appearance and maintain intact their own ways of living they are now undoubtedly affected by the various social and cultural changes of the new political organizations.

Only large Jewish centers will be able to resist the pressure of their surroundings and maintain their institutions, ways of life, their historical traditions and their cultural ideas and ideals.

Rosenwald Foundation with a gift of $35,000,000 "for the well being of mankind," he stipulated that the capital and interest should be expended within twenty-five years of his death. He made it clear at the time that he was opposed to foundations in perpetuity because large numbers of them had ceased to be of any utility since "times are changing so rapidly, that it is impossible for us to predict what the need of future generations is going to be."

Largest Single Gift Made to Jewish Colonization

A man of multiple interests and activities throughout his life, Mr. Rosenwald remained a Jew by sympathies and affiliations. The largest single gift he made to any project was the $6,000,000 he contributed to the Agro-Joint for the promotion of its Jewish colonization in Soviet Russia. Prior to that, in 1918, he contributed the sum of $1,000,000 for relief work among the Jews of war-torn Eastern Europe. His interest in the people to which he belonged extended, moreover beyond the generous gifts he made. To the welfare of his people he gave as generously of his thought and his time as of his funds.

He was active as Vice President of the American Jewish Committee and of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. He served as trustee of the School for Jewish Social Workers and of the Baron de Hirsch Fund. Among his other leading Jewish interests were the Jewish Charities of Chicago, of which he was the Honorary President, the Jewish People's Institute and the Sinai Congregation, of which he was a Vice President.

Among his Jewish benefactions were $50,000 to Hebrew Union College; $75,000 to the Board of Jewish Education of Chicago to house the College of Jewish Studies; $50,000 for Hebrew books for the Congressional Library.

Mr. Rosenwald, whose own schooling ended in the public schools of Springfield, Ill., where he was born, was primarily interested in education, health and scientific research and it is to these three interests that the major portion of his gifts have been donated.

His largest donations were to the Chicago Industrial Museum, which he established with a $3,000,000 gift, the Chicago University, which also received $3,000,000 and $3,500,000 for the establishment of rural schools for the negroes in the South. Among his other donations were $100,000 to Harvard Medical School for the study of nervous diseases among children; $75,000 for the establishment of a children's unit; $30,000 for a library in Luxor, Egypt; $15,000 for a Technical Museum in Austria.

Mr. Rosenwald Concerned With Welfare of Masses

Concerned always with the welfare of the masses, one of the most recent experiments of Mr. Rosenwald's Foundation was the effort to supply hospitalization at a cost within the reach of the man of moderate circumstances who did not wish to be a charity patient.

For his benefactions Mr. Rosenwald received the Harmon Medal for promoting race relations, the Grand Insignia of Honor from the Austrian government and the Goethe medal for his outstanding service for Jewish welfare.

In addition to his own philanthropic enterprises, Mr. Rosenwald served as trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation, the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, the University of Chicago and Hull House. He was chairman of the Chicago Bureau of Public Efficiency, a governing member of the Art Institute of Chicago and the Chicago Historical Society; life member of the American Museum of Natural History and the American Academy of Rome.

Mr. Rosenwald was twice married. The first Mrs. Rosenwald, the former Augusta Nushbaum, whom he married in 1890, died in 1929. In 1930, Mr. Rosenwald married Mrs. Adele Goodkind, mother-in-law of his eldest son, Lessing.

Zionist News*Local Zionist District to Fete Young Judaeans at M'Lave Malke, Jan. 23

At a meeting of the Executive Board of the Zionist District of Providence, held Thursday evening at the Biltmore Hotel, plans were made for a M'lave Malke, in honor of the Young Judaea Clubs of the city to take place Saturday evening, Jan. 23. Robert L. Berstein was appointed chairman, Mrs. Herman Swartz, treasurer; Joseph Keller, entertainment; Mrs. Morris Sheer, menu, and Mrs. Morris Shoham, secretary. Bernard M. Goldowsky, membership chairman, reported fine progress.

The guest speaker of the evening was Rabbi Mordecai Bunim, who spoke of the opportunities existing in Palestine today. The natural resources are immense, he said, and are awaiting development. Rabbi Bunim told the members that when the port of Haifa will be completed, Palestine will become the center of commerce between Asia, Europe and Africa. He also said that 4,000,000 boxes of oranges will be exported this year from Palestine. The slogan that should be followed, believes Rabbi Bunim, is that a Zionist's paramount duty is to plan to settle in Palestine, not only to obtain funds for colonization.

J. C. C. PLAYERS EXCEL

On Tuesday evening, the Jewish Center Players made their tenth appearance in the six years of their existence. Six years ago this amateur dramatic organization was formed to promote the development of dramatics among Jewish young men and women in the city. On Tuesday, this group showed remarkable skill and dramatic understanding. A large audience greeted the players with enthusiasm.

The first play to be given was "The Wasp." Edward Kleiner carried himself ably as General Peter Gretcheff with Lillian Greenberg playing the part of Mlle. Irma Melipoff, in a very fine manner. Joseph Herman took the part of Lieutenant, aide to General Gretcheff. "The Pot Boiler," hilarious comedy, was carried off well with the following cast: Bob Mushnick, Leo Cohen, Arthur Fleisig, Minna Udisky, Ethel Schwartz, Al Gurwitz and Harry Seegal. The last play to be given was "Eyes," unfolding a tense situation in which a Jewish grandmother endeavors to keep her children within the Jewish fold. Evelyn Siegal presented the difficult part of the grandmother with ability, with Ida Pollock as granddaughter; Bob Mushnick, the grandson; Harry Seegal, the young cavalier. The plays were coached and produced by Mrs. Samuel Starr, who has been dramatic coach at the Center for the past three seasons.

Only TRUTHFUL TIRE ADVERTISING WINS!

WHEN we advertised the fact that Firestone was furnishing us complete lines of Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires that not only met the price but beat the quality and construction of every grade of special brand tires sold by mail order houses and others, the mail order houses made vigorous protests to Better Business Bureaus and made demands upon newspapers not to accept Firestone or our advertising.

We cannot blame them for they did not want car owners to know that they could get, at no more cost, a better tire made by a leading manufacturer, bearing his name and guarantee plus our guarantee and our service.

When car owners awakened to this fact, they came to us, compared the sections we had cut from Firestone Tires and special brand mail order tires, and were astounded at the Extra Values we were giving.

As a result, our business and that of other Firestone Dealers throughout the country, increased so fast that it has been necessary for Firestone to run their factories twenty-four hours a day and Firestone sold more tires in April, May and June than in any like period in the history of the company.

In our advertising we do not make comparisons involving laboratory tests which you cannot verify except in a laboratory—neither do we make comparisons of construction or price based on misleading classifications such as first line tire, second line tire or third line tire*—we do not make comparisons to confuse and mislead you as to actual values and service—we only make statements and comparisons that you can verify for yourself in our store before you purchase the tire.

Come in today and get the greater safety, extra quality and extra values found only in Firestone Tires.

*When the National Better Business Bureau realized that their Bulletin No. 634 was being taken advantage of by some advertisers they issued a Bulletin dated July 10th as follows:

"In our Bulletin No. 634 entitled 'Definitions of Terms Used in the Tire Industry' we published definitions of First Line—Second Line—Third Line—Heavy Duty and Super Heavy Duty Tires.

"Our definitions pointed out, 'Although each manufacturer's or distributor's first line tire may represent his best standard size 4 or 6 ply tire, there is not necessarily any equality of competitive first line tires as to materials, workmanship or price.' This interpretation also applies to all lines of tires.

"We therefore recommend that advertising to the consumer shall avoid the use of these terms for the purpose of comparing competitive products."

NEWS WRITTEN FOR THE JEWISH HERALD by GEORGE JOEL

Resolutions for 1932

Making New Year's resolutions isn't confined to any particular sect, but usually they are made by a fellow for his own guidance. My resolutions are of a different nature. I am making them for the other fellow.

For a College President: "I firmly resolve that if my board of trustees complains too bitterly about the number of Jewish students entering our institution, I will not make an exception because one of the Jewish lads is proficient in athletics, neither will I dodge behind psychology tests as my sole explanation for the sudden drop in the Jewish registrations. I will blame it on the depression or if worst comes to worst, admit the truth."

For a Professional Sports Promoter: "I resolve that I won't feature an athlete just because he is Jewish and will draw crowds to my arena. I will try to pick him on his ability alone and if I can't get one I won't make one of my Gentile boys pose as a Jew."

For a Couple of Football Coaches: "I resolve that if my teams lose I won't blame their defeat on my imaginary idea that the Jewish students in the college do not cheer for the team. If I have a number of Jewish players on my squad I won't be afraid of letting them get some of the glory even though the athletic director hollers."

For Prize Fight Managers: "I resolve that I will not publicize the fact that my boy, who happens to be Jewish, attends synagogue every Saturday morning, observes all the rituals, but yet fights on Friday night. Neither will I make him change his name so that there can be no question of his Jewishness, and I won't insist that he wear the Star of David on his fighting trunks."

To a Jewish Soccer Player: "I resolve to be slightly less commercial about my Jewishness and will not complain all the time about race prejudice because I, myself, am not entirely free of it. I will also remember that I am not playing solely for the glory of my race because most of them don't care whether or not I ever kick another soccer ball."

For a Tennis Official: "I resolve that I will conduct myself with slightly more dignity and although I am very much opposed to the entrance of Jewish players into the game, I promise that I will be a little more careful about showing my prejudice and will occasionally give a Jewish player a break. Of course, this resolution doesn't go for Davis Cup try-outs."

For a Crew Coach: "I resolve to attempt to recover from the idea that Jewish boys are 'ipso facto,' unfitted to row on a crew and that occasionally there will be a Jewish boy capable of pulling an oar."

For All Gentiles: "We firmly resolve that we will not say, 'Some of our best friends are Jews,' neither will we boast about all the 'white' Jews we know. In fact we might even try to get over our preconceived notions of how a Jew looks, acts and speaks, in other words, we will start over with the assumption that the other fellow is somebody like ourselves."

The Kid—A Poem About a Jewish Prize Fighter

Have you read D. P. Berenberg's slim volume of verse, titled "The Kid"? You should. It is the story told in verse, of a young Jewish fighter, who wins his way to the top with his fists. Sensitively and ably done it recounts in rapid fire style the struggles this young Jewish fighter has to make to overcome his pity for his opponents. Only after he is whipped, through this streak of softness, does he realize the futility of being too kind. After he wins the championship and he has gained his objective he remains the same sorrowful son of Zion.

When this book appeared some months ago most critics labelled it as an imitation of Joseph M. March's work, the "Set-Up," which was similar in theme. But that is as far as the comparison can be carried. The externals of life interest Berenberg only incidentally, his story is of the mental troubles of his character—in consequence it is a much more lasting and convincing work and well worth your attention.

The Successful Failure

By NINA KAYE

Jerome Altman could dance, swim, play golf and harmonize. But he couldn't make a living. Everybody liked Jerry. He was the life of every party and he was always available for those afternoon functions at which men are so scarce.

Nobody thought less of Jerry because he never worked. Sooner or later, it was felt, some rich girl would want his charms for her very own. Until then he could live exquisitely on the bit of money his father had left him. He never had to pay for food, as he was the most consistent "diner out" in town.

And then, of all people, Jerry Altman fell in love with Sadie Gold.

Sadie was young and slim, with a heart shaped face and dancing, golden hair. There was nothing about Sadie to cause such surprise at a young man falling in love with her. Any young man. But Jerry Altman!

Sadie taught stenography at the Eton Business School. She had four younger sisters and the Golds lived in back of the general furnishing store which Mr. Gold tended reluctantly, shuffling out in his house slippers at the insistent summons of a bell attached to the door.

As was expected, Jerry did the unexpected. He didn't rush out and get a job. Instead, he proceeded to woo Sadie in the only way he knew how.

He sent her flowers. He took her riding, swirling along the autumn roads in Dick Solomon's car or Hy Baer's roadster. Dick and Hy, busy at the office, couldn't be using their cars anyway. Of course they didn't mind lending them to Jerry.

Glowing eyed as only a girl who knows she is loved can be, Sadie used to stand on the corner near the Eton school. She'd only have a minute to wait, before Jerry would swoop down upon her.

Jerry made her laugh. In her short life there had been so little time for laughter, with the four girls at home and papa making less and less each year.

Jerry made her forget there was supper to cook and dresses to mend or make smaller for Helen and Sybil and Hannah and Rose.

Jerry made the autumn landscape a russet gold, instead of the drab brown it had been before.

Jerry made life worth living.

The girls were thrilled. For once, they all agreed. Jerry was handsome. Stunning, Helen said. Oh. Sadie was the lucky girl to have such a fellow. Why, Jerry Altman belonged to the country club! His friends were the richest people in town. Oh, it was wonderful, wonderful.

Papa constituted the minority of one. Accustomed as he had grown to look up to Sadie as the head of the family, he now demurred.

"What kind of a job has your young man got, Sadie?" he asked over his fourth glass of tea.

Sadie's young cheeks flushed as she bent over the ironing board. "He hasn't any job, papa," she answered, trying to down the feeling of shame that welled up in her.

"Then, why are you going out with him?" her father demanded. "How are you going to get married if he hasn't got a job, huh?"

Sadie lifted the iron in time to save it from scorching her only evening dress. "Oh, papa, please don't talk like that. We aren't thinking of marriage. Can't I go out with a man and have a good time without expecting him to marry me?"

But she did expect him to marry her. A young girl doesn't let herself grow as fond of anyone as Sadie was of Jerry without expecting marriage. Usually, she expects it long before she has grown fond of him.

And Jerry had every intention of marrying her. He told her so, on every occasion.

He called for her in a taxi to take her to the Country Club dance. Sadie invited him in, a certain defiant pride in her tilted head as he made his way through the store to the living room beyond. The girls, little magpies on other occasions, hung back shyly, acknowledging the introduction. Jerry laughed, chuckled them under the chin and asked them how they'd like him for a brother.

That looked as if it was all settled, didn't it? And Jerry had no job.

Jerry didn't have a job when they were married. Sadie assured her employer that she would be just as good a stenography teacher as Mrs. Jerome Altman. Papa shook his head, pride in his handsome, popular son-in-law warring with a feeling that everything was not as it should be.

No one could have complained about the wedding. Everybody in town was at the synagogue. Afterward, Jerry's friends gave the bridal couple a dinner at the Country Club.

Jerry and Sadie went to Atlantic City on their wedding trip.

Sadie never forgot that trip. Of all the joyous things that happened to her after her marriage, nothing was as gay, as carefree, as exciting as that trip.

Jerry made everything such fun! In Philadelphia, he announced that they couldn't go on. He didn't have any more money. But Atlantic City was their goal. Laughingly, sending their luggage ahead (express collect), they "hitched" the rest of the way. Sadie never could bring herself to tell her family that she had "hitched" on her wedding trip. They would never understand.

Now could many people understand their marriage. There are so few girls who reach the full flower of their womanhood in marriage. Some sour. Others fade too soon. But Sadie bloomed. She was radiant.

Back at home, Jerry scuttled around until he found an apartment. He busied himself with collecting the furniture—a few pieces from his old home, a few chairs from Hy Baer's mother. Someone begged them to give house room to an upright piano.

Thrown together, embellished with Jerry's charm, it was a home, a place where the young crowd loved to drop in, bringing their sandwiches and beer from the corner delicatessen.

Sadie went on teaching at the Eton.

And there wasn't a girl in town who didn't envy her. Who else could boast (though she did not) that their husband sent them flowers? Not for an anniversary or a birthday, but simply because he had seen them and they reminded him of her?

Helen and Sybil graduated and went to work. Sadie sent her father to the country for the summer. The girls were always in her house. They adored their brother-in-law. He always made them laugh so. They'd never had so much fun in their lives.

On their fifth anniversary, Sadie and Jerry went away.

"Atlantic City revisited," Sadie said, standing at the boardwalk railing and breathing in the salt air.

Jerry's arm was about her waist. It was the hour before dinner and they were alone.

"Sadie," Jerry's voice, usually buoyant with gayety, was strangely serious. "Sadie," he asked, "do you ever regret?"

"Regret?" Sadie turned, wide blue eyes to him. "Regret what?"

"Regret that you married me? That you didn't marry someone like Hy or Dick? That you haven't got a house of your own, and a car? That you couldn't stop work and keep house and play bridge and give luncheons? Tell me, truly, Sadie?"

Sadie threw back her head and laughed. "If you're going to grow serious in your old age, I'll begin to regret," she said.

"No, tell me, truly. I want to know."

A fine line came between Sadie's brows. She was thinking. Rapidly, she went over in her mind the lives of some of the other girls, girls she had known in school, girls she had come to know through Jerry. Some of them had cars, some of them still went to work, some weren't married. Most of them were tied to their houses, lives set in the routine of breakfast, lunch, dinner.

Sadie shook her head. "No," she said, "there isn't anyone I'd charge places with."

And she meant it.
