By the Way

Tidbits and News of Jewish Personalities

By DAVID SCHWARTZ

On the Subway

Speaking of conditions there is the story of Alphonse Robins. Two Jews, it appears, were seated side by side in the express going to Flatbush. They rode on and on silently—each seemingly indifferent of the other—each staring fixedly in front of him.

Finally, one of them emitted the deep Jewish groan, "O!"

"You're telling me," exclaimed the other.

Chess

and Jews

The newspaper stories of the recent chess masters' tournament, held at Pasadena, reads much like an account of some synagogue meeting. Jewish names, one after the other. Chess continues, it appears, to remain the Jewish game par excellence. Not a little surprising, too, when one remembers that we are supposed to be such a commercial people. And yet our official game is perhaps the only one that hasn't and probably can't be canalized.

How would Hitler explain this fact of Jews sticking to a game in which there is absolutely no money?

Chess

and Boxing

I think boxing next to chess might be classified as something of a Jewish sport. Of course, there is far from the Jewish predominance in pugilism that there is in chess, but in another sense, it is perhaps even more Jewish—perhaps the most Jewish sport there is. I refer to the devoted Jewishness of its Jewish participants. Thus, I read in the papers that Kid Berg always wears "tzizith." Now, I don't think that Dr. Lasker, the chess man wears "tzizith" and it is probably also true that Sidney Lenz, the bridge expert, does not.

Another Jewish characteristic of pugilism is the tendency to emphasize Jewish nomenclature—by adding a "sky" or a "witz"—something that will make the name of the fighter strikingly Jewish. That again, you never see in any other fields.

You would be surprised to hear that Barney Baruch, for instance, had changed his name to Baruchkowsky, or that Franklin P. Adams, the Jewish columnist, had changed his name to Chayim Aronson. And yet things like that are constantly done in pugilism.

Hoover's

Trumps

Well, we have now another supplementary edition of "merry-go-round" with more gossip about officialdom. This latest work, speaking of the Justices of the Supreme Court, is rather lavish in praise to Brandeis and Cardozo.

And as to Eugene Meyer, it regards Meyer and Ogdin Mills as "the two trumps" of President Hoover. Eugene Meyer's brother, has, I believe, indicated some interest in Jewish matters—at least in some of the economic aspects of Palestine, but Eugene Meyer himself appears to be completely estranged. So I don't know that we can "kleib much nachath," if you are out "kleibing" this morning from Meyer's career.

A Chip of the Old Block

With all due respect to Mr. Meyer, I myself am just now more interested in the career of a Jew holding a much less notable position, that of Simon Lubin, who has just been appointed head of the State Bureau of Commerce of California. Lubin is the son of the late and famous David Lubin, and according to reports, inherits much of the idealism of his distinguished parent.

R. I. Home for the Aged to Conduct Membership Drive

The Jewish Community of Rhode Island is aware of the fact that the Home at 99 Hillside avenue has been in operation for several months. There are 32 aged men and women in the Home, with a number of applications pending admission.

Everyone who has visited the Home has expressed his high enthusiasm for not only the beautiful accommodations surrounding the lives of these aged, but also the program of operations installed in the Home. Every resident has been studied by the staff of the Home from a medical and social standpoint, and each one is provided with his or her particular need in the way of special care and food.

It is a privilege to be affiliated with this organization which is giving succor and comfort to aged during the last years of their lives.

Due to the summer season, it was not practical to carry out an intensive campaign for members. The first opportunity for organization is presenting itself now, and a special committee, consisting of Hon. Charles Brown, chairman; Dr. Ilie Berger, chairman of team formations; Alter Boyman, publicity, and members of the Executive Committee, Max Berman, Charles M. Hoffman, Bernard M. Goldowsky and M. P. Ostrow, are calling a meeting of the workers on Sept. 6th, at 7:45 p. m., at the Narragansett Hotel to launch the Membership Drive, with an enrollment of 1000 members, annual subscribers to cover the maintenance of the Home.

Every one is confident that the community will respond liberally and promptly to the call for members.

More Than 3000 Americans Resident in Palestine

Washington, Sept. 2—(JTA)—According to an announcement issued by the State Department, 3313 American citizens reside in Palestine. These figures were announced upon completion of a survey based on reports from Consuls abroad, of American citizens residing in various foreign countries.

The figures quoted for Palestine represent a high ratio of the total population of the country, and indicate the large number of American Jews who have settled in Palestine, as relatively few non-Jewish Americans reside there. This figure does not include many additional Jews coming from America who either never adopted American citizenship or lost it through expatriation on account of prolonged absence from the United States, or adoption of Palestinian citizenship.

Rev. Harris, Pioneer Jewish Minister, Dies in So. Africa

Johannesburg, Sept. 2—(JTA)—The Rev. Louis Harris, pioneer Jewish minister, died here recently at the age of 78.

Born and educated in London, Rev. Harris came to South Africa in 1886. From 1887 until a short time before his demise, he was engaged in ministerial duties in Johannesburg.

He was actively identified with Jewish philanthropic and civic work.

British Firm Obtains Large Palestine Contract

Haifa, Sept. 2—(JTA)—Spinneys, Ltd., a British enterprise, will supply all foodstuffs to the laborers of the Iraq Petroleum Company, it became known here recently.

The contract is valued at half a million pounds and will remain in force during the entire period that the Petroleum Company will be engaged in completing its work of pipe laying.

RABBI SONDERLING TO HOLD RELIGIOUS SERVICE, FULL DRESS

Former Spiritual Leader of Temple Beth-Israel to Organize Neo-Chassidism Congregation, New York

New York, Sept. 2—(JTA)—New York is about to witness an entirely new form of Jewish religious observance combining interpretation of the Scriptures with a colorful ritual described as resembling that of the Ancient Temple.

RABBI JACOB SONDERLING

An important part of the ritual provides that members of the congregation attend the services attired as for a social function.

Rabbi Jacob Sonderling, exponent of Neo-Chassidism, as this form of Jewish worship is categorized, is reported to have had great success in Germany with the unique ritual of his conception and to have attracted to his services many of the most distinguished Jews in Hamburg, Berlin and other places.

He gave New York Jewry its first taste of this type of religious expression at a private demonstration held recently at the Community House of Temple Emanu-El, which received the approval of a considerable number of prominent Jewish men and women.

On Selichoth, Sept. 24th, Rabbi Sonderling will invite the general public to attend a Neo-Chassidic mid-night service at the Level Club. He has also engaged the auditorium of the Level Club with a seating capacity of 2300, for special services he will conduct on the Jewish Holidays, Rosh Hashonah and Yom Kippur, Oct. 1 and 2, and 9 and 10, after which Rabbi Sonderling plans to form a permanent congregation in New York for the followers of Neo-Chassidism.

In making known these plans, Rabbi Sonderling explained his motives and the new form of religious observance he is introducing in America. He said:

"Neo-Chassidism tries to penetrate the channels of the five senses to the soul of man. It is 'sense-appeal' and it is in accordance with old Jewish thought. Rabbi Moses Issesles, one of the great authorities of the middle ages, stated that the sanctuary of old was surrounded by a wall. That wall had five doors leading to the temple corresponding with the five senses.

"The synagogue and public services as now conducted do not appeal to the younger generation. The Jewish home is vanishing rapidly. What can be done in order to revive Jewish religiosity? Modern Jewry apparently is not discouraged by the lack of response of the Jewish masses. It has continued to build magnificent temples and has invested untold millions in structures which remain empty.

"I suggest that we build, instead of huge synagogues, the Jewish home for the congregation at large.

"In order to avoid misunderstanding, I insist most emphatically that the Jewish centers as built in recent years are not the things I have in mind. There is nothing Jewish in them. We can't become Jewish by

President Hoover and Secretary Doak Scored For Immigration Policy

"Detroit Jewish Chronicle" and "Opinion" Criticize Emphasis on Hostility of Attitude Toward Liberal Immigration Policy

New York, Sept. 2—(JTA)—President Hoover and Secretary of Labor Doak are scored for injecting a spirit of hostility into the immigration question in editorials which appear in the Detroit Jewish Chronicle and in Opinion.

President Hoover is criticized for the disheartening emphasis he placed on further rigid restriction of immigration in his speech accepting re-nomination for President.

Secretary of Labor Doak's report on the figures of immigration and emigration in which the latter shows a great increase over the former, is the subject of criticism in Opinion.

The Detroit Jewish Chronicle writes: "President Herbert Hoover speaking at Washington, D. C., in the course of his speech accepting the Republican re-nomination for the Presidency: 'I favor rigidly restricted immigration. I have by executive direction, in order to relieve us of added unemployment, already reduced the inward movement to less than the outward movement. I shall adhere to that policy.'

"While it was not necessary for the President thus to emphasize the fact that his administration is definitely pledged to the severest curtailment of immigration, this statement serves further to dishearten those friends of the immigrant elements who are anxiously hoping for a word of comfort in behalf of those from whom they are separated and with whom they hope to be re-united.

"All parties now appear to be united on a similar platform calling not only for the curtailment of immigration, but for the practical shutting of the doors of this country tight to all newcomers. Granting even that there is unquestioned wisdom to such a policy, a word might be said by those in power in behalf of close relatives who seek re-union with those in this country. Something might have been said about knitting closer the ties of friendship and kinship between the newcomers in this country and the natives; a word of encouragement might have been spoken to those among the 15,000,000 foreign-born who have not yet been naturalized. Instead, the spirit is one of hostility.

"By this time, the foreign-born are reconciled to the fact that their battle for an open-door policy is a hopeless one. But this spirit of constant emphasis upon restriction might have been toned down to eliminate the element of hostility."

Opinion declares:

"The patriots have triumphed. The terrible alien menace to America and American institutions has at last been stayed! After one hundred and fifty-six years the tide of alien immigration has at last been turned and American shores are safe from the peril of the onrushing immigrant! This is the joyous tidings to be gleaned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Security League and the hundred-percenters, organized and unorganized, from the report just published by the Secretary of Labor Doak. 'During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932,' the statement reveals, 'only 35,576 permanent immigrants were admitted, and 103,295 alien residents left the United States with the expressed intention of making their homes in other countries. In other words, alien emigration exceeded immigration by 67,719.'

"So ends one chapter at least in the story of the making of America, a story which has been written by immigrants whether their place of emigration was England or Russia, Germany or Italy, whether the century of their immigration was the 17th or the 20th. It is a chapter which reflects little credit on those who wrote it for it was conceived in fear and executed in bitter and unreasoning hostility to the strangers within our gates. Even before the depression gave the excuse to the alien haters and hunters of an economic justification for their prejudice, concerted action had been attempted to make immigration difficult or impossible to those seeking American citizenship and to embitter the lives of those who had managed to enter the country and whose only crime was their desire to become a part of the American people.

"But it is only a chapter that has been concluded. There are depths of sanity and reservoirs of good-will and understanding in the American people which will not permanently be poisoned by the lingoism of the exclusionists. The open door, in the older sense of the term, may not return, but a decent and just compromise must be achieved between it and the present policy of the Labor Department, which so obviously gloats over the fact that America has lost more future citizens than it has gained during the past year.

"In this, as in other questions of national policy, we have witnessed a reaction against the liberal mood and a legation of the progressive spirit. But peoples, like men, do not live by negatives or reactions. The genius of America is positive. And an essential part of that genius is its traditional welcome to the stranger and its friendship for the alien born."

20 R. I. DELEGATES AT ENCAMPMENT OF JEWISH WAR VETS

Mrs. Max A. Cohen and Paul J. Robin to Seek Advancement in National Office

A delegation of more than twenty Rhode Island members of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States and its auxiliary, headed by Paul J. Robin, National Junior Vice Commander-in-Chief, are attending the 11th annual national encampment of the organization in Atlantic City, Sept. 2 to 5. The group left Providence Wednesday in automobiles with the exception of Dr. Maurice J. Mellon, Commander of Pawtucket Post, who traveled to the convention city by air.

Several of the Rhode Island delegation are expected to take part in active balloting for office at the convention. Junior Vice Commander Robin is a candidate for Senior Vice Commander, and Mrs. Max A. Cohen of Providence, National Junior President of the auxiliary, is a candidate for National President. Both Robin and Mrs. Cohen have the indorsement of Rhode Island and other posts in the country. The battle for National Commander-in-Chief is expected to be waged between J. George Fredman, Jersey City attorney, and Capt. William Berman of Boston.

The Jewish organization, founded in 1893, is regarded as the second oldest in the country. Its membership comprises veterans of the Civil, Spanish-American and World Wars. Approximately 250,000 veterans of the World conflict are now members of the 100 posts of the organization.

Among topics slated for discussion on the encampment floor is prohibition, immediate payments of the bonus, participation of American Jews in a World Jewish Congress, annual Jewish visiting day to the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, immigration quota laws and plans for a consecrated plot in Arlington Cemetery for the burial of Jewish war dead.

In addition to Junior Vice Commander Robin, the Rhode Island delegation will include Commander Herman M. Davis of the Rhode Island Department; Commander Reuben Lipson of Rhode Island Post; Harry A. Hoffman, Senior Vice Commander;

By NINA KAYE

Sarah Isaacs' work-worn hands fumbled in her cutlery drawer. Then she sighed and dropped the extra knife and fork and spoon back. She was always forgetting.

Didn't she know her boy Manny would never come home again? There were only her and Harry now. Only two places to set.

But every night she found herself bringing out the extra cutlery. Every night she waited for Manny's step outside in the hallway, his key in the lock, his rough kiss, and "Hello, Mom." She kept listening. But he didn't come. He didn't dare. His father wouldn't let him in the house.

The tears spattered her hands. Harry lowered his paper, crumpling it angrily. The face above the paper was kindly, lined with care, but his voice was harsh.

"Mama! Stop crying! How many years, how many years must I listen to you crying?" Sarah flung the knives and forks on the table. "I don't care!" she cried, gulping back the tears. "You can be a man of iron if you want to. I'm only crying for my boy!"

Harry folded his arms. "Why didn't he think of you, crying for your boy, all the time he was away? What does he think he is? Running away from home and not writing a letter for so many years and then, all he needs to do is jump on a train and come and we should welcome him with open arms? I say no and I mean no! He doesn't need us now, just like he didn't need us all those years. He can look after himself, it looks like. Mama, give supper!"

Sarah dried the corners of her eyes. "I can't stand it," she moaned, her body swaying as she talked. "After we gave up ever expecting to see him again, he should come here, a fine young man, with money enough to take care of us—and you won't let him in the house! Harry, I can't stand it! To lose a boy and then to find him again! Harry, let me see him once! Let me talk to him! He's waiting, at a hotel here. He sent me a letter."

Ruthlessly, Harry grabbed the worn envelope from her tired hands. Without a word he tore it across and across.

"Harry!" she screamed. "There was money in there! Twenty dollars!"

"It makes no difference," he snapped. "I don't want no money from him. Did he worry about us before? Did he care if we were living or not?"

Sarah turned dully to the stove. She didn't know this man who was her husband, this cruel, heartless man. He, who had comforted her, when Manny ran away, who had cherished her and tried to bring happiness to the ten long years which followed, now watched her like a hawk. He wouldn't even let her go to the grocery alone, lest she slip away and meet Manny; Manny, her baby, who had come back to her!

Until then, Sarah had not minded that Harry was laid off at the furniture store, where he had served so many years as salesman. He was old. They could manage. But now she longed for him to leave her alone, that she might go to her boy.

As if in answer to her prayer, Harry came running up the two flights to their flat one morning when he had gone down for a paper.

"Mama," he called breathlessly, "they want me back at the store! They're running a sale. Mama, my coat. Quick, my hat!"

He was out of the apartment before Sarah could ask a question.

Hardly had he left when Mrs. Mulvaney appeared in the flat. "Good mornin' to you, Mrs. Isaacs," she said and, with the privilege of an old neighbor, came right to the point. "It's a woman without spunk ye are, staying here because your old man tells you you dassn't meet your boy, with him lying at death's door."

Sarah's hand flew to her mouth. "No!" she moaned.

Mrs. Mulvaney nodded slowly. "It's right in the paper, you can see for yourself."

Sarah looked wildly about the kitchen. But Harry had taken the paper away with him.

"It's right there," Mrs. Mulvaney said. "A fire, last night, at the Langren Hotel. He was one of the injured. I always read the injured lists—I saw it myself."

Sarah ran for her hat and coat. "Where is he?" she demanded. "Where did the paper says he was?"

They went to Mrs. Mulvaney's flat for the paper. By that time Sarah was trembling so her teeth chattered.

"Ye'd better take a taxi, dear," Mrs. Mulvaney called down the stairs after her. "Ye'll never find the hospital in the state ye're in."

The hospital was so huge it frightened Sarah. She asked timidly at the desk for Emanuel Isaacs. "I'm his mother," she added.

The nurse glanced down a long rack of cards. "Room 305," she said, without noticing the little old woman in shabby black.

Like a sleep walker, Sarah went the length of the corridor, stood meekly in the elevator and then, on the third floor, went down another corridor. Before Room 305 a white-coated orderly stopped her. "You must wait here," he whispered. "I'm his mother," she pleaded.

The orderly shook his head. "One visitor at a time," he said sternly.

Sarah's head lifted proudly. One visitor! Who but his mother should be that visitor? But the orderly would not let her in.

At last the door swung open softly. Sarah stepped forward eagerly and collided with Harry.

His eyes were wet, but his face had lost its set, grim look. In a minute Sarah was in his arms. "He's all right? Tell me he's all right!"

Harry held her up as she sagged. "He's all right, Mamma. But we'll have to take care of him a long time. The nurse said—"

But Sarah had hastened into the white, white room and stood before the swathed figure on the bed. "Mamma," she whispered brokenly, "Baby."

"Hello, Mom," he mumbled through the bandages. "Papa said I could come home when I can be moved."

She could say nothing for the tears that choked her.

Lincoln Trust Company
Makes Arrangements
With TORGSI Stores

The Lincoln Trust Company has completed arrangements with TORGSI in Soviet Russia, for the issuance of orders in American Dollars so that upon presentation of such orders, relatives in Russia may receive all kinds of goods at very reasonable prices.

TORGSI is a chain of stores which the Soviet Government opened so that tourists may buy all kinds of goods for Dollars. Under their arrangement this privilege is now extended to Russian people as well, but they must have American money with which to buy the goods.

Orders, issued by the Lincoln Trust Company in American Dollars, enable people in Russia to obtain goods in the TORGSI stores without any difficulty and without payment of duty or taxes. This is the absolutely safe and most convenient method to help relatives there at the present time.

There is a great selection of dry goods, shoes, clothing and food-stuffs at the TORGSI stores located at:

Archangel'sk, Baku, Batum, Charov, Cherson, Evpatoria, Feodosia, Kiev, Leningrad, Minsk, Moscow, Nikolaev, Novorossisk, Odessa, Poti, Rostov-Na-Donu, Saratov, Sevastopol, Tiflis, Tuapse and Vladivostok.

The prices are quite moderate. This system has been in operation since July and hundreds of people in Russia have already received clothing, food products and many other kinds of goods and have informed their relatives in this country that they were very happy to receive help in this way. The people there know best what they need most and under this system it is left to them to select what they need and what they want.

If a relative lives in a town not mentioned above, the Lincoln Trust Company will issue their order on the central store of TORGSI in Moscow. This order will be mailed to the relative, who will communicate with TORGSI in Moscow. He will thereupon receive a list of the goods and prices and will make his own selection and notify TORGSI. The goods will be shipped to him from Moscow by parcel post without duty or taxes of any kind.

Berlin, Sept. 2—(JTA)—The local police have decided to establish a permanent guard during the period of services at the Kiel Synagogue. This Synagogue was recently the scene of an attempted bomb outrage.

The possible danger to which Jewish worshippers will be exposed during the forthcoming Rosh Hashonah and Yom Kippur holidays and the manner in which they can best be given protection is now being given consideration by local Jewish leaders and it is understood that the government will be expected to take protective measures in the neighborhoods of Synagogues throughout the country.

SYNAGOGUE VALUES

It is a matter of great interest to American Israel that there has been a phenomenal increase in synagogue values during the last decade. According to a book, entitled "The United States Looks at Its Churches," compiled by Dr. C. Luther Fry for the Institute of Social and Religious Research, the value of synagogue buildings during that time has increased approximately three hundred per cent. and from 1906 to 1926 the increase in the value of these structures has been approximately four hundred per cent.

The actual values for 1906, 1916 and 1926, respectively, are $23,198,925, $31,012,576 and $97,401,688.

The number of members during thirteen years is 2,930,000, but this is modified by Dr. Fry, who states that this number may be somewhat exaggerated because Jewish membership has been defined recently in such inclusive fashion that the data collected is virtually population estates, rather than membership figures comparable with those of other religious bodies.

It is worthy of note that ninety-four per cent. of synagogue members reside in cities, which makes Judaism the largest urban religion in the country. The Jewish percentage of church membership in the United States is six and six-tenths and the percentage of Jews throughout the country affiliated with the synagogue is sixty-nine per cent.

Although there is no state in the Union where there is a majority of synagogue membership among religious organizations, there is no state which has no members of a synagogue and the Jews are one of the eight religious denominations that have at least one house of worship in every state.

The value of the synagogues per synagogue adult member is $33, but this small investment does not mean that synagogues are comparatively inexpensive, but on the contrary. The average synagogue costs $86,000, which is higher than the cost of a church for any other large denomination in the United States.

The Jewish congregations also have the smallest expenditure per adult member, the figure being $6.52 in urban areas and $.35 in rural areas. In view of this small expenditure per adult member it is surprising to find that the Jews are among the highest in expenditures per congregation with an average of more than $12,500, contrasted with a national average of only $3800.

The Jews have always been urban dwellers, which is natural, as they were debarred from cultivating the land for many centuries, hence they were forced to embark in mercantile pursuits, which made it necessary for them to settle in cities.

When they came to the United States in the middle of the 17th century, they settled in the cities and the first thing they did was to erect houses of worship.

The Jews have always been liberal in their expenditures on their houses of worship with the result that they are among the most magnificent edifices of the kind in the country.

Tidbits and News of Jewish Personalities

Lubin has evolved a plan of economic relief, which it appears to me, has much common sense to it. It is no panacea, and is not intended as such, but it is by steps as his that this depression may at least be softened. California is confronted by a surplus of some of her farm products, and at the same time, in other parts of the country, there are potential consumers, but without the ability to meet the prices of former years. So Lubin dispatched salesmen to the relief agencies all over the country, who are offering these relief agencies, canned fruit, oranges, rice and other California products at bargain prices. If Lubin can show farmers that they don't have to burn their crops, he will have done something characteristically Lubinesque.

Jews and the Revolution

I have been glancing through a History of American Colonial Life by Professor Oliver P. Chitwood of the University of West Virginia. On the whole I think it a rather good work on the subject, but the Professor makes one statement there that I think is founded on inadequate premises. Most of the Jews in the 13 colonies, he says, were loyalists.

Now, that is a rather broad statement to make, and I can't see how any such statement can be made, for there was, of course, nothing like a census of the loyalists and no way by which even a rough numerical estimate can be made. What Professor Chitwood did was probably go by the noise made by a few Jewish loyalists, and by the additional fact, that the greater number of those who were better off financially were loyalists, and since Jews were among the merchants and financial classes generally, ipso facto, they were also loyalists.

I dare say that the most prominent person of Jewish persuasion in the public eye was a Jewish girl, Rebecca Franks — and it happens that she was a loyalist. She belonged to the aristocratic set—the Penns and the Cheves of Philadelphia. She was pretty, sparkling,—one of the intellectual belles of the day. When that dashing but ill-fated English officer, Major Andre, staged his tournaments, which regaled the British Commander-in-Chief, General Howe, Rebecca was one of the queens. Officers, too, on the "patriotic" side liked to associate with her. One of her brothers, too, I believe, was a stout loyalist. She probably contributed more to creating the general impression that Jews were loyalists than a hundred Jews who fought in Washington's army could offset.

Hadassah to Hold National Convention at New York, Sept. 18-20

New York, Sept. 2—For the first time in its history, Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, will hold its convention in New York City on Sept. 18, 19 and 20, at the Hotel Commodore. More than 300 delegates from all over the country are expected, representing 251 chapters and a total membership of approximately 30,000.

This convention will be the first to have present at its session the director of the medical work in Palestine maintained by the American Organization. Dr. Haim Yassky has been in the United States for six months, during which time he has studied a number of health institutions in various cities, among which are New York, Boston, Baltimore, Syracuse and others. At the convention, Dr. Yassky will give a detailed account of the progress of the work in Palestine. Most striking will be his report on infant mortality in the country, which in 1925 was 131 per 1000, but which in 1930 was reduced to 69. The Hadassah Medical Organization has waged an anti-trachoma campaign among the Jewish schools, reducing the number of those afflicted among the children from 35% to 8%. The organization has also been instrumental in eradicating entirely ringworm of the scalp, which in 1922 ravished 68% of the school population.

The Hadassah Medical Organization in Palestine has under its supervision four hospitals, two health centers and 22 infant welfare stations, plus two maintained in conjunction with the Labor Federation and a department of school hygiene. During 1931 there were registered at the 22 stations 3549 expectant mothers, 3828 infants and 1517 children of pre-school age. In the same year, the school hygiene department had under its care 27,079 children. For the maintenance of this system of health and medical work, Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, supplied a budget of $250,000 for 1931-1932.

NEWS WRITTEN FOR THE JEWISH HERALD BY GEORGE JOEL

THE AMATEUR TENNIS PLAYER

—A Story With a Grain of Truth
Moe Pinkus was 17, a Senior student at the local high school. He was Jewish, obviously so, and handsome in a Semitic way. Nearly six foot tall, broad shouldered, slim waisted with black curly hair, lively brown eyes and an infectious molasses laugh he was well-liked by his fellow-students. The institution he attended was located in the heart of a great city and there were so many Jews in attendance that on Jewish holidays even the Gentiles stayed home. As a student, Moe was better than average and his ambition was to be a physician. Moe possessed one quality that set him apart from his fellows. He could make a tennis ball do his bidding with more skill than anyone else in the school, but he didn't see what that had to do with the study of medicine.

Of course, Moe played on the school's tennis team, in fact he was the number one man. For two years he had not lost a match, and when the local sectional tournaments for Juniors was held, Moe entered and won the right to represent his districts in the nationals, which were to be held at some distant place.

Moe's parents were in mildly comfortable circumstances. They met their bills with promptness, but found little left over for those extras which make the difference between mere existence and soul satisfying comfort. When Moe told his father that he had been chosen to play tennis at the nationals his father was elated until Moe asked him to contribute funds for the trip. The old man's answer was short and to the point. Moe could go but not on the family budget. Moe was an amateur and he wondered but not for long. He talked to the coach of the tennis team, that gentleman got in touch with the local tennis club and in a few words was told that the club would stand Moe's expenses for as many days as he should stay in the tournament.

The nationals were different than the school tournaments, but Moe found that if you hit a tennis ball hard enough and got it back over the net often enough you would eventually win. The papers made a big fuss over Moe and after he had come through a strong field and won the championship, he found himself somewhat of a celebrity. When he returned home it was to a big reception. His mail, which had before consisted of the ordinary letters a young man receives, was now heavy with important looking documents inviting him to participate in tennis tournaments and offering to pay all his expenses. Moe also received a number of offers of college scholarships.

He knew that his father wanted him to go to college and he also realized that his family couldn't afford to send him. Moe wanted to go to college and then to medical school. He discussed the matter with his teachers and they advised him to take advantage of one of the offers.

The next fall found him at an eastern college and until the tennis season rolled around he was allowed to go his own sweet way. He found his studies comparatively easy and felt that he was making progress. Moe was on top of the world. He was being given an education for playing the one game he loved the best. But when the tennis season started things were different. The tennis coach insisted that he put in a stated number of hours of practice a day. The team went on trips and missed classes. Moe's first request to be excused from a long spring trip because he had to prepare for exams was met with cold disapproval. Moe went on that trip and for the first time didn't get a kick out of a tennis match. He got through his exams, but by the skin of his teeth.

During the summer Moe played in the tournament and did the tennis circuit. In the men's nationals he went to the fourth round and was widely applauded for his showing. College was to open in the middle of September and Moe had been invited to go to the western coast for a series of tournaments. He was all ready to refuse when his coach told him that the school expected him to play.

He went and got back to the college campus the end of October. Six weeks behind in his work he found the going rough and at the end of the term failed in two subjects. He determined to make up his work during the following summer, but the spring was a hectic one, college matches, preparations for the inter-collegiate gave him little time to himself. When the big week came examinations were also scheduled, but the coach insisted that Moe play tennis. He was overtrained but breezed through the first four rounds. In the semi-finals in going for a lob he crashed into a fence, and when the doctor had gotten through examining him, found that he had fractured his arm in two places, sprained his ankle and wrenched his back. He didn't play any more tennis that summer.

In the fall, Moe went back to college, knowing that his days as a tournament player were over. He tried to matriculate, but was politely told that his scholarship had been revoked and if he wishes to attend classes he would have to pay his tuition. The depression was at its height and Moe knew he could expect no help from home. He returned to the city—pretty much broken up. Because he was behind in his studies the local colleges refused to allow him to enter.

Moe is not working now. Work is hard to get, especially for a fellow who has a weak back and a bad arm. He stills wants to be a doctor. He was an amateur tennis player of great promise.

CHATTERINGS

Millicent Hirsch was the finalist of the girls' eastern singles tournament. She lost her final round match, but won the doubles event. The nationals, scheduled to start at Forest Hills on Sept. 3rd, should be the best tournament of the decade.

Don't bet on Brooklyn to win the National League pennant.

HIKE SEPT. 11

A hike to Lincoln Woods is scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 11. "Goats Rock" fireplace and a nearby field have been reserved for that day and a real ball game between two strong teams is being arranged.

The party will meet at the club rooms at 10:30 and leave promptly at 11 a. m. A "Hot Weinie Roast" is also being planned. Simon Feldman has charge of all arrangements.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES

Myron Keller has started the educational program by having club members give short talks on various subjects. During the last two meetings Sam Marcovitz gave a brief description of a new railroad device that prevents head-on collisions automatically. Benjamin Winicour, in a short talk on "Comparison of Ancient and Modern Law," tried to disprove the fallacy that the ancient law of the Hebrews was more severe than the laws of today, by citing examples of both, and showing where modern penalties for similar crimes are much heavier than ancient penalties. The members showed deep interest in both subjects and asked many questions afterward.
