

Seventeen Year Old Threatened After Testifying In Court

MIAMI, Fla. — A slender 17-year-old Jewish girl bore the brunt of bitter and threatening verbal attacks last week after having testified in court that she was offended by school prayers "to a God who is not mine," according to a New York Post article by Milt Sosin.

The telephone at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Milman rang constantly for six hours until after midnight "with nasty and threatening" calls for their daughter, Lois.

Police cruisers kept a protective eye on the house through the night but there were no incidents.

Lois, who graduated from Dade Country High School a month ago, denied in court that her God was the same as the Christian God.

"These people (Christians) don't believe in one God," she said. "They pray to a Trinity or to the Son of God."

She said she had been offended by prayers in school that used phrases such as "in Jesus' name."

Outside the courtroom she was greeted by a small but angry crowd that heckled her. One woman shouted:

"Who taught you to hate like that?"

Lois was only one of a parade of witnesses who testified during a hearing on two suits before Circuit Judge J. Fritz Gordon which seek to outlaw religious programs in Florida public schools.

The programs include classroom observances of feasts like Christmas, Easter and Chanukah and daily readings from the Bible. The suits were filed by Harlow Chamberlin, an agnostic, and by four Jewish parents and a Unitarian. Hearings are entering their third day.

The Jewish witnesses complained most bitterly about daily devotional exercises which make references to Christ as the Lord and Savior.

Dispute Rages Over Election Of Rabbis

JERUSALEM — The chaotic situation which has developed over the election of new chief rabbis for Israel took an unusual turn last week when the chairman of the nominations board announced that one phase of the dispute had been directed to a secular authority, the Israel attorney general, for clarification.

Rabbi Yehudah Lev Maimon, the chairman, made the announcement at a meeting of the board which was boycotted by three of the four appointees from the Supreme Religious Council.

The four representatives named by Rabbi Yaacov Toledano's Ministry for Religious Affairs were present, as was Rabbi Amram Aburavia, an appointee of the Supreme Religious Council whose accreditation had been withdrawn by the council because he ignored a directive to boycott inaugural meeting of the nominations board.

Technion Professor Admits Espionage

TEL AVIV — Professor Kurt Sitte, internationally known physicist who headed the physics department of the Haifa Institute of Technology until his arrest in June has admitted contacts with a foreign agent it was reliably reported.

Dr. Sitte, who conducted various research projects at the Technion under contract with the U. S. Air Force particularly in cosmic radiation, also admitted passing information to a foreign power through that agent. It was also reported that Dr. Sitte, who was sent to Israel specifically to conduct espionage, met once a month with the foreign diplomat who was reportedly sent to Israel to meet him for espionage purposes.

The meetings took place at a cafe in Haifa and were secretly photographed by Israel security forces. Dr. Sitte now holds a West German passport which he obtained two years ago. Between 1954, when he arrived in Israel, and 1958 he had no nationality status and traveled with an Israeli "laissez passe" document serving the functions of a passport.

Police sources said that the investigation had been completed and data handed over to the Israel attorney general's office for use in preparing an indictment.

The Czech-born physicist was reported to have been under Israel Security Service surveillance since his arrival in 1954. According to an earlier report, he had become very friendly, as an inmate in the Nazi Buchenwald Concentration Camp to which he had been sent for anti-Nazi activities, with Communists who now hold important posts in the Communist world.

During his interrogation, he tried to deny the charges but when he was shown documents and photographs he admitted his espionage activities. Subsequently, he has cooperated with his interrogators.

BEGIN WAR GAMES

JERUSALEM, Israeli Sector — The Israeli defense forces last week began large-scale summer war games in the Negev Desert.

Deputy Defense Minister Simon Peres said at a Tel Aviv meeting that the Israeli forces must be constantly prepared to ward off any Arab attack.

He warned that the United Arab Republic Army had been re-equipped with modern weapons and was a highly mobile aggressive force.

Among weapons being used in Israel's maneuvers, scheduled to last several days, were French-made S-10 antitank guided rockets.

Surplus Of Food In Israel May Lead To National Crisis

JERUSALEM — Israel's food shortage has ended and in its place is a food surplus in many crops — and herein is the making of what the Jerusalem Post terms a "permanent, national farm crisis of terrifying proportions."

Discussing Israel's new farm crisis, the Jerusalem Post editorial says:

The first surpluses showed that small-scale farming is too expensive to compete in world markets, especially when products must be shipped over considerable distances. Only Israeli oranges are produced by economic units, and even these can hold the market only because of their better quality.

Exodus From Farms

While the new villages are just beginning to find their feet, there has been a market exodus from the villages that were most successful before the State.

Religious Zionists Plan $2,000,000 Campaign In 1961

NEW YORK — The Religious Zionists of America announced last week plans for the launching of a $2,000,000 campaign for the support of religious institutions in Israel. The campaign will be started at the beginning of 1961.

Rabbi Bernard Bergman, president of the RZA, said that the campaign was made necessary by the cancellation of a $750,000 annual allocation to the organization by the United Jewish Appeal. The fund-raising campaign will be known as the Religious Israel Appeal and the funds will be sought from local federations in cities throughout the United States. The RZA will conduct independent campaigns in communities where requests for allocations were rejected, Rabbi Bergman said.

"The United Jewish Appeal will no longer include the Religious Zionists of America among its beneficiaries in terms of monetary allotments for religious activities in Israel," the RZA president declared. "Our fund-raising campaign, to be known as the Religious Israel Appeal, will fill the void left by the withdrawal of monetary subventions by the United Jewish Appeal which in the past three decades has made possible the achievements of Miz-rachi-Hapoel Hamizrachi for a religious life in Israel. However, the United Jewish Appeal is still the main source of revenue for Israel and should continue to receive the support of the Jewish community at large."

Farmers in the old moshavim claim that gluts in certain crops and dropping prices have made farming too precarious. But for the drought, Israel would have been inundated with plums and grapes this year. Good farms stand empty, while good farmers seek jobs in town.

Saphir suggested in the Knesset that the cure was to let the best and most efficient farmers survive, including those fortunate enough to have a little dairy-farm on the outskirts of Tel Aviv, and not the radical reorganization that is already being enacted by Minister of Agriculture Moshe Dayan.

Saphir's recommendation is attractive for the consumer, but it spells disaster for the immigrants who were deliberately settled in the distant and empty lands in the Negev which are a liability and not an asset if they have no population.

Dayan Confident

Israel cannot afford to abandon half the country because it is harder to make a living there than in the Sharon. The country is too small for such a luxury. There is no way of settling unskilled immigrants except on the land. The tools for every other form of employment are even more costly.

Minister of Agriculture Dayan, admits no insuperable problems. Livestock breeding is relatively profitable, and a good share of the market must be reserved for the new villages.

Pull Up Stakes

Ha'aretz observes that the difficult situation in the Galilean settlements is to be seen in the southward trek of scores of families who are heading for the cities and development towns in quest of a livelihood. In some places, individuals are pulling up their stakes who have been on the land for the past 10-15 years. Expensive water, higher labour and equipment costs; lower income and the burden of night vigilance, are the causes of this movement from village to town.

BREAK INTO TEMPLE

COLOUMBUS, Ohio — Vandals broke into Temple Tifereth Israel, causing widespread damage to the executive offices and the kitchen and taking $50 in cash. No estimate of damage has been made and no religious objects were taken.

The intruders broke locks and door knobs and damaged a door and some furniture. The contents of various drawers were found emptied on the floor. The temple was the target of vandals earlier this year.

Jewish Refugees From Congo Revolt Arrive In Brussels

BRUSSELS — The number of Jews fleeing from the Congo and arriving in Belgium continued to mount last week. Many families from Luluabourg, one of the hardest hit centers of rebellious native assaults on European whites, arrived here without luggage or funds. Among the arrivals was the Avzaradel-Bonnavida family which had resided in Luluabourg for four generations.

The refugees called the situation in Luluabourg "very grave" and expressed deep concern about male members of their families who remained and who are now presumed to be isolated in that Congo city.

Arrive In Nightclothes

Some of the refugees arrived in nightclothes and described scenes of violence and pillage. Many of them said they wanted to emigrate to Israel.

Jewish social welfare agencies swung into action to aid the refugees.

Previously a group arrived from Leopoldville on a U.S. Army plane. They included an Israeli family of six persons, a Tunisian woman and a French woman. They had fled to Brazzaville from Leopoldville leaving all their possessions behind.

They reported that 5,000 of Leopoldville's 10,000 white residents had sought refuge in Brazzaville community of Leopoldville joined and described the situation as one of complete chaos. The Jewish with the rest of the whites in the trek to Brazzaville as refugees.

Not Alarming

At Elizabethville, where most Congo Jews reside, the situation was reported as not alarming. Chief Rabbi Levy has not left Elizabethville. The situation in Stanleyville was reported, in telephonic communications received in Brussels, to be calm. The Jewish population was not molested and there has been no pillaging.

Information from Leopoldville, an area of considerable disorder said that Maurice Alhadeff, president of the Leopoldville Jewish community, and his staff were "all right."

In Panicky State

Many members of the Jewish community of the Congo are in a panicky state because they do not have Belgian nationality but none of them have been harmed, according to an eye-witness report by an Israeli official who returned to Tel Aviv from the strife-torn new African republic.

Yaacov Levav, a Solel Boneh director, who was a member of an Israeli delegation to the Congo independence celebration, said the Congo Jews who were frightened had retained their former Greek or Italian nationality. He added that among the 2,500 Jews in the Congo Jewish community, many of whom are former residents of Rhodes, talk about migrations to Israel was becoming more frequent.

He said he had heard that Jews of other African countries, south of the equator, also were thinking about migration.

— Visiting Day At Camp Jori —

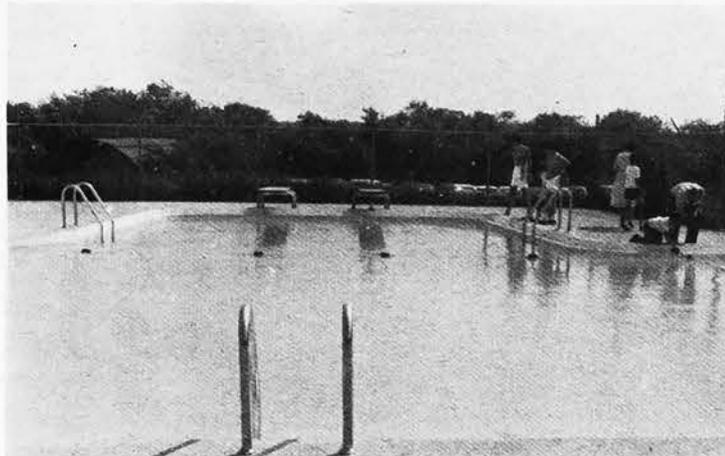

Camp Jori at Point Judith held its first visiting day of this year's camping season on Sunday, July 17. The first group of boys and girls had arrived on June 30 and were due to return home on July 19. There will be two more visiting days as two more groups of children attend camp.

Camp Jori includes bunk houses for the boys and girls, an infirmary and dining hall-recreation room which circle a large grassy plot in the center of which is an outdoor fireplace. Back of the dining hall is the swimming pool, shown below, which was completed just two years ago. On the other side of the camp are large areas devoted to basketball courts, football, baseball and any other sports which require wide, open spaces.

A junior girls' group, above, entertains the parents and guests who have come to visit the camp.

The "Sympathy" Orchestra performs ably with director (Mr. Weiss with the accordion), counselors and campers all doing their best to complete the afternoon's program in grand style. Below, the senior boys and girls do a square dance as Mr. Weiss calls the figures.

Gowned in imported Chantilly lace trimmed with sequins and seed pearls, with a Peter Pan collar, long pointed sleeves and a fitted basque bodice, the bride was given in marriage by her father. A scalloped panel accented the front of the full skirt which ended in a cathedral train. A crown of seeded pearls held her fingertip veil. She carried a prayer book with an orchid and stephanotis.

Mrs. Joseph Braunstein, sister of the bridegroom, wore a gown of blue and white lace.

With both sides vulnerable and North the dealer, the bidding went:

North	East	South	West
1S	Pass	3C	Pass
3H	Pass	3NT	Pass
4D	Pass	4H	Pass
4NT	Pass	5H	Pass
5NT	Pass	7C	Pass
7NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

I will assume that none of my readers would have been responsible for so extraordinary a sequence of bidding. However, it can be seen at a glance that there is no difficulty in making the contract at double dummy. All that has to be done is not to finesse the clubs but to drop the king. Before reading on you may care to ask yourself whether you would, in fact, have made this play for good reason.

For the comfort of those who, at this point, have notionally gone light I can record that they played the hand as ably as the well-known player sitting South. Those who for the right reason dropped the king of clubs instead of finessing can, therefore be suitably impressed with their own acumen.

The correct procedure is to play off the four hearts, three diamonds, and two winning spades. Then, instead of taking a club finesse in the hope that East has king and a small club, South must do a little simple arithmetic. East has proved to have only one spade, three hearts, and either three or four diamonds. He, therefore, cannot have fewer than four clubs in his hand. If the king is one of them the contract is doomed. Again a little arithmetic shows that West has six spades, three hearts, and three or four diamonds. West is, therefore either void of clubs or possessed of a singleton. If he is void, a well-protected king of clubs is with East and the contract cannot be made. West must be assumed, therefore, to have a singleton club — the singleton king. Hence at the tenth trick South must lay down his ace of clubs to make the contract.

The grand slam should not, of course, have been bid, and in my view the correct bidding would lead to a contract of 6NT.

Magazine Reports Continuation Of Soviet Anti-Jewish Policy

LONDON--A continuation of the anti-Jewish policies of the leaders of the Communist Party in the Soviet Union in the field of science was reported recently in the British magazine the "Jewish Observer and Middle East Review."

"These policies," the magazine stated, "are to make use of Jewish brains but to eliminate Jews in top positions as soon as non-Jews become available either through demotion, dismissal or... by not allowing newly-proposed Jews to take up positions to which their brilliance and achievements entitle them."

The magazine made the statement in reporting that although there were apparently nine Jews among the 50 candidates for election to full membership in the Soviet Academy of Sciences, not one was among the 11 chosen. All of the candidates had their candidacy for election to the highest scientific body in Russia endorsed by groups of scientists, scientific research institutes and even branches of the Soviet Academy. Some of the candidates are already associate members of the Academy.

The fact that so many Jewish scientists were sponsored, the magazine said, is evidence that "Russian scientists have preserved their liberal traditions, in which there was never room for anti-Semitism."

The Jewish candidates, the report said, with one exception were all physicists and mathematicians, several being holders of Stalin Prizes. "Even the most perfunctory list of their qualifications," the article asserted, "shows the important contributions Jewish brains continue to make to the latest Soviet achievements in the fields of pure and applied physics and technology."

For years, the magazine noted, not a single Jew has been elected to full membership in the Academy, "whose immense prestige in the Soviet Union can hardly be compared with that bestowed on its members by similar scientific institutions in the West."

The Jewish candidates were: Dr. Izrail Moiseyevich Gelfand, department head at the Steklov Institute of Mathematical Sciences;

Dr. Vitaly Lazarevich Ginzburg, department head at the Lebedev Institute of Physics, professor at the Gorky University, famous for his work on cosmic rays and the dissemination of radio waves in the ionosphere;

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

BUSINESSMEN IN GOVERNMENT

American businessmen are making a louder noise this year than ever before about plunging into politics, but unless there's an extraordinary reversal in their basic attitudes in the next few months, when it comes to serving their government in Washington, the vast majority will play the role of the man who wasn't there.

Even the Eisenhower Administration--both praised and damned as a "businessman's government"--has had an extremely tough time attracting the kind of businessman it has needed and wanted.

Even businessmen whose terms in Washington have been glaringly publicized have, in most instances, stayed only a short time and have resigned just when they were beginning to become useful.

Even industrialists who admit their public service enhanced their corporate careers have, in most cases, left disgruntled.

What has been true in the Eisenhower Administration is likely to be more true in the next Administration, for neither of the candidates will have the almost mystic appeal to the business community of General Eisenhower, in the White House as the first GOP President in 20 years.

In fact, a prediction based on solid evidence collected a while back in a three-year study of

"Businessmen in Government" by the Harvard Business School Club of Washington, D.C., would indicate that:

The businessman who'll enter government service during the next administration will, in general, plan to stay less than a year, not even long enough to learn the ropes. His average tenure will be 1 1/4 years.

He'll not volunteer and typically will be recruited in a most haphazard way, often on a strictly political or personal basis. As the study emphasizes, "There exists a frightening lack of interest in the business community for participation in the government service." Half of the businessmen surveyed didn't even know the attitude of their companies toward public service; 85 per cent of the major trade associations canvassed said that the question hadn't even come up as "a live issue."

He'll gripe, when he does take a government job, about the restrictions, red tape, sacrifice of money and time with his family, etc. He'll hardly be a help in recruiting others to a tour of duty.

He'll consider his service in government as a "career detour". This despite the fact that half who have served in government admit this background furthered their business careers and that a striking one-third of those who returned to their old companies returned to better jobs.

There's no doubt that the new Administration will have to do a major recruiting job among businessmen. There's no disputing that the businessman must play a key role in Washington's bureaucracy.

What, then, might the new Administration do to improve the situation? The Harvard group makes these provocative suggestions:

A central recruiting office should be set up in the White House to act as a clearing house to find the right candidates and to maintain a reserve file of capable businessmen willing to serve.

Businessmen at all levels should act aggressively to develop a greater understanding of the need for serving in government and to stress public service as a desirable factor in our society. Corporations should define, adopt and publish their policies on executive leaves for government service. Trade associations should put on education drives.

The principle should be established that no citizen coming from outside government is to serve for less than two years except in an emergency. Those engaged for shorter periods should be used as consultants, and not considered regular employees.

The businessman's plunge into politics should involve much more than getting out the vote, trying to influence results. It must and should involve service, for, as the study says, the calibre of the public servants recruited from industry "may have more to do with our survival than the profit motive..."

The Lyons Den

by Leonard Lyons

FOREIGN DISPATCH: After Jack Kennedy's war service ended, in '45, he went to England as a newspaper correspondent to cover the British elections. None of his father's eminent British friends saw him for a while; young Kennedy was spending his time, instead, with the man-on-the-street. He came to the correct conclusion that Churchill would be defeated, and that Clement Attlee as head of the Labor Party would become Prime Minister.

But then, before he sent his dispatch, he visited Lord Beaverbrook, who insisted that Kennedy's conclusions were nonsense, that he would be making a grievous error if he were to report that Churchill would lose. Beaverbrook was too persuasive; Kennedy believed him.

SPORTS NOTE: Gene Tunney lunched at the Cote Basque the other day with Bill Fugazy, of Feature Sports, Inc. Tunney mentioned that in his final fight, against Tom Heeney, he was guaranteed $550,000--a sum no promoter today could match. "But we topped your gross," Fugazy boasted, "that is, by using a closed-circuit TV audience. With TV, the Johansson-Patterson fight was seen by 660,000 people"... "TV," Tunney grunted, "a stealthy way to beat my record."

TRAVEL NOTE: Bill Rosensohn, who lost out in his fight promotion role here, is busy promoting a Pan-American Basketball League. He'll be at the Olympics in Rome, to sign the star basketball players after the games. He will make available to South American clubs the USA pro basketball stars, who are idle in the summer--when it's winter Down Under.

BOOK DEPT.: Zsa Zsa Gabor was given a party at the Four Seasons recently, by McCall's, in celebration of the publication of her story. One of Miss Gabor's friends mentioned that this party was bigger than any of her wedding parties. Zsa Zsa replied that this was as it should be--the literary party bigger than her wedding parties: "After all, I have had two and a half husbands, but only one book."

THEATER NOTE: Boris Aronson, the scenic designer, is working with Garson Kanin on "Do, Re, Mi." He heard Kanin quote Dorothy Thompson on Show Business, "It combines all the aspects of a crap game and a dictatorship of the proletariat"... Aronson, speaking as a veteran of countless shows on two continents, said "The theater is organized calamity."

BUSINESS NOTE: The reporters covering the conventions miss the veterans of other such gatherings long since gone. H. L. Mencken, for one. I watched Mencken work his typewriter for hours on end, through all the din of the Philadelphia convention. Then later, back in his hotel room where he started writing a Sunday piece, he noticed a friend packing a bag, and shouted, "Be quiet. How can I work if you make all that noise?"

LOCAL NEWS: Frank Sinatra will do the film version of Elmer Rice's "Counselor-at-Law"... Paul Newman will be Elizabeth Taylor's co-star in the movie version of "Two for the Seesaw"... Tom Poston will return to the Broadway stage next season in a first play by Bill Gunn, "Marcus in the High Grass." Bryan Shaw will direct.

MARITAL NOTE: At the Gene Fowler funeral in Hollywood, Ben Hecht told of the day he and Fowler tried to talk to their friend, John Barrymore, about his imminent marriage to Elaine Barrie. Barrymore cut them short: "Gentlemen, you are looking at a man who is about to go over Niagara Falls in a barrel."

POLITICS: In Los Angeles the convention-men proceeded on their business trying not to utter a word about religious bigotry. Thus one of them said to Gov. Abe Ribicoff of Conn.: "You can't run for Vice President with Kennedy. That would be an unbalanced ticket--two Easterners"... And at the moment Kennedy was nominated, Mayor Bob Wagner, who is Catholic, was told: "There goes your chance for the No. 2 spot. After all, you're from Yale and Kennedy's from Harvard, and an Ivy League ticket just wouldn't do."

ART NOTE: Rene Bouche was painting a noted New Yorker for his series to be exhibited in November. The New Yorker said to Bouche: "I once heard Picasso tell an artist, 'When you do a portrait, people recognize the subject; when I do it, people recognize the artist'"... "When I do it," replied Bouche, "I try to have people recognize both the subject and the artist."

Vacation Talk

Anyone who doesn't agree that New England has the best baseball fans in the entire country is sure to run into a terrific argument from Mr. and Mrs. Louis Roth of the Roth Ticket Agency in the downtown Arcade.

The Roths point not only to their own ticket sales in stating their point, but to the attendance figures for the games at Fenway all year. Here is a club, they assert, that had nothing but bad luck in the early going, was publicized as the worst team in the major leagues, and tried awfully hard to live up to the part; here is a team that had manager troubles of the worst kind in the first two months; a team beset with nothing but trouble; yet the fans turned out in highly respectable numbers, and kept coming back.

And when the Red Sox showed an inclination to come from behind in the late innings and win games and get out of the cellar, the gates were almost broken down in the mad rush for seats.

At a time when the first place Yankees were drawing crowds of some 20,000 plus, the last place Red Sox were playing before audiences of almost the same size.

Such support, the Roths claim, is a wonderful tribute to the fans of this area; more, it is proof that the most loyal fans live right here and that New England is the finest sports area in the entire country.

Both Roths are astute baseball observers. Their opinions are sound and interesting. One of the most interesting is their joint belief that the best general manager the Red Sox could hope to engage is Ted Williams. "Ted knows ball players!" says Louis Roth, wagging a finger in emphasis. "Because he is so shrewd an observer, he would be particularly good when it comes to trading, and in deciding which youngsters should be signed by Boston." That's part of Lou's theme on Williams' behalf. This column concurs entirely.

Speaking of Ted the Thumper, who would have thunk it, a year ago or early this season, that the former Kid would be fighting for another batting championship at the age of 42? Such a happening — Ted's winning the hitting title. I mean — would be welcome on several counts. First, it might tend to keep Williams active as a player for another campaign. Second, it would sort of make up for some of his disappointments of the past.

I recall the championship Ted may have lost because George Kell didn't have the courage to take his final turn at bat in his final game of the season. Kell and Williams had staged a tight stretch fight. When the results of the Red Sox final game came in, Kell was still playing his last game. Learning from the press box of what Williams had done, and being told that at the moment, with one time at bat coming up, he was a fraction of a point ahead of Ted, Kell yielded to temptation and accepted his manager's offer to take him out of the game.

Had Kell not been given such prompt and up-to-date information on Williams' activities, he would have batted once more.

Then, if he had gotten a hit, he would have had a clean and clear-cut victory. But had he gone out, Ted would have had himself another title.

On two other occasions, Ted Williams led the league in hitting without getting official recognition of the feat. Both times came in seasons when because of injuries or other reasons, The Thumper did not put in the required number of times at bat. One of those years, Ted was hitting well above .400 when his abbreviated season ended.

An official victory by Ted this year would be both welcome and appropriate in atoning for these former misfortunes, if they can be termed that.

And one final Williams comment: Ted now has won the final victory in his long-time running feud with Boston's newspapermen. Not only are they spraying him regularly with hosannahs, but when did Ted Williams, the fans or anyone else ever think to see the day when the Boston press would openly be boosting him to be the team's manager?

Ted not only outlived his severest critic, but now he has converted all the others. What a sweet and complete victory!

Now that a permanent truce is in effect, can't you just feel the chagrin of the Boston writers? Williams is generous in his discussions with writers all over the country. But he will not give more than a mass interview to the writers of his team's home city. When it comes to exclusives, out-of-town scribes get all the plums. So have their past follies caught up with the Boston bunch.

Random Comments

Most baseball managers are offered another job in the organization when they are bounced. Tom Yawkey must really have disliked Billy Jurges. Jurges was just thrown out on his ear . . . Wonder if Booby Harris will get the same treatment when he is replaced.

Which reminds me somehow of the stories that are being told these days about the non-player activities during the recent Little League season. More and more complaints are being made against coaches and parents.

The way I get these stories, the elements of good sportsmanship and character-building are shockingly ignored by many parents and some coaches. The offending parents create friction and trouble by attempting to interfere with the operation of teams on which

Real Estate Brokers Play Important Role

Prospective home-owners, as well as home-owners seeking to sell their property, are well-advised to seek the advice and full cooperation of a real estate broker. More than that, the services of the broker are actually essential both in the negotiations leading to, and the actual buying and selling of real estate.

This opinion was expressed last week for the Herald by Samuel C. Riddell, president of Sam Riddell, Real Estate, of Hope Street, Providence.

"In many respects," Mr. Riddell asserted, the person or persons who are buying a house are investing in a blind article. This is particularly true in cases where the house is an older one, but the statement holds even in respect to many new homes.

"The buying or selling of real estate is unlike, for example, the purchase of life insurance. In the latter case, the buyer receives a policy which contains certain promises and explains the conditions effective in that policy. In real estate, however, there may be and probably are faults and other conditions that are not obvious to the eye, and to which there is no recourse once the deed is signed.

"A conscientious real estate broker, through his repeated visits to the property, his questions and investigations, and his invaluable experience, can be of great assistance to the buyer. Conversely, through his intimate knowledge of current conditions, he is able to provide practical and efficient service to the seller.

"Not to be forgotten is the saving in time and aggravation on the

Mortgages — Whys And Wherefores

Most people talk about mortgages quite casually and in a manner calculated to give the impression that they are experts on the subject. Actually, there are many phases of mortgage considerations that many property owners and prospective owners may in fact know very little about.

In appreciation of this situation, Samuel H. Wilk, head of S. H. Wilk Realty Company of Broad Street, has prepared this memo.

There are two methods by which mortgages may be obtained — directly from a bank, or FHA. (VA mortgages for World War II veterans have now expired. VA financing for veterans of the Korean War part of property owners or seekers when they enlist the assistance of a real estate agent, particularly when they have a general idea of what they are looking for.

"Now a word to the owners of properties. If you are earnest in your desire to sell, fastest and most satisfactory results will be obtained by selecting a real estate broker in whom you have confidence and giving him exclusive selling rights.

"This exclusive, however, does not restrict the opportunities for the sale of the property; this office, for example, maintains an open listing as far as other brokers are concerned, because we are most willing at all times to cooperate.

is very dormant because of their low interest rate that banks generally will not accept.)

After a few years of ownership, the property owner develops a certain amount of equity (roughly described as the cash value of the house to the owner at any particular time). Only in rare cases does this not apply, usually where the area in which the home is located has depreciated severely in value.

Because of this equity, the property owner who finds himself in financial distress can go to his bank or other lending institution and refinance the balance of his mortgage over a longer term, thus cutting down his monthly payments to a level that he can more easily afford.

In such cases of distress, the wisest policy is to consult your banking institution first. The bank does not want to take possession of your house; it genuinely wants your family to continue to own the house and pay for it. Banks, therefore, are always willing to discuss your financial situation, offer sound advice, and help resolve your problem. Don't be afraid of your bank!

In some ways, having a mortgage is like saving money. As one example, the portion of your mortgage that applies to the interest is a tax deductible item on your income tax.

Bright Future For R. I. Is Foreseen

Industrially and economically, Rhode Island faces a bright future!

This is the forecast of Mr. A. Arnold Rodman, president of the real estate firm on Broad Street, Providence that bears his name.

Mr. Rodman, who devotes much of his time to the large industrial division of his organization, expressed his faith both in this state's industrial climate and its ability to attract new industry from outside its own borders.

In his capacity as a specialist in handling industrial properties, Mr. Rodman has been active in and out of Rhode Island, arranging for the modernization and renovation of industrial buildings, getting potential occupants interested in transferring their operations here, and providing them with assistance in the matter of obtaining leases, among other considerations.

"We are bringing into Rhode Island a diversified clientele," Mr. Rodman said this week. "And we find that, on the whole, we can interest manufacturers in any section of the state that has the kind of structure that fits their requirements."

Mr. Rodman emphasized that in negotiating with these clients, both here and in his visits to their headquarters in other states, he finds a genuine interest in Rhode Island and an attitude of complete willingness to set up operations in the smallest of the 50. The attractiveness of our strategic location, our ample and skilled labor supply, and the saving in money and time effected by the

Cites Need For Realistic Appraisals

Edward F. Judge, Realtor, of 808 Park Avenue, Cranston, spoke recently on the necessity of good appraisals when an owner plans to put his property on the market for sale.

Mr. Judge told his audience that the old maxim of "a house properly listed is half sold" applies to the home owner as well as the broker who is handling the property.

"A competent Realtor Appraiser can save the owner time and money at the very start of the sales effort," he said, "by advising the owner frankly what he believes the property will actually bring on the market. Too many owners guided by their own evaluation of their properties impede the sale, thus causing these properties to remain on the market for many months beyond the normal period needed to effect a sale."

Mr. Judge is public relations committee chairman of the Rhode Island State Association of Real Estate Boards, and is a former availability of existing buildings, all are factors in this interest, he declared.

Mr. Rodman pointed out that while he specializes in commercial matters, the firm of A. Arnold Rodman does not neglect the residential phase of the real estate business. Mrs. Rodman, a licensed and widely experienced broker in her own right, heads this division, with the assistance of their son Sheldon, who is associated with the firm.

their sons appear and in their loud disapproval of the coaching if their progeny are not treated like (or made into) stars.

Too many coaches, I am told, forget the example they must set to the boys, and openly express their annoyance by words, movements and gestures when their boys make an error or fail to deliver. It almost seems that the coach's personal reputation hinges on his team's being returned victorious.

On both ends, the situation is becoming scandalous. It is not just a local problem. Many communities across the country are rapidly becoming disillusioned with the Little League operation because of the excess actions of parents and coaches. A word to the wise . . . ?

Clouds On The Yank's Horizon

As the American League season started, this column forecast that the Yankees would have plenty of pitching, defense and spirit, and that their pennant chances would hinge on the ability of the hitters to come through. Further, that if the Yanks could stay within five games of the leaders by All-Star time, they would have an excellent chance to win, because they could then be expected to put on a sensational spurt down the stretch.

Well, the hitters have been coming through, the rest of the team has been holding up, and the All-Star interval has passed with the team in first place, although another might come in August.

So far, you would have to admit that my script was well conceived and written. But Yankee fans are cautioned against over-optimism. Their club may not pull away from the pack as fast as they think it should; indeed, it may even have substantial trouble in winning. There are a couple of serious chinks in the Yankees' armor.

By his own admission as well as his actions, Whitey Ford has revealed that he is on the downgrade. With his arm in good shape again for the first time in three years, Ford still has lost the consistency that used to guarantee a top performance whether he won or lost.

Many batters who once would have been lucky to get the ball out of the infield on the spunky southpaw now take outrageous liberties with him. Defenders of the faith argue that he is just careless. But Whitey himself admits that he has slipped, that while his thinking is just as good, the ball does not perform its usual tricks. He concedes that his famous curve ball is not what it used to be five years ago.

This spells trouble for New York.

So does the terrible physical handicap under which Mickey Mantle plays every day. Mantle is the team's spark today as Joe DiMaggio was ten years ago. And like Joe, Mickey plays whenever possible because he realizes the effect his presence in the lineup has on his mates, and what harm may be done if he is absent.

But the sad story is that Mantle is virtually a cripple. He endures terrible pain almost daily. While he can still fly around the bases and outrun most balls hit to his sector of the outfield, his fabulous hitting has been greatly affected by the periodic collapse of the knee.

When Mickey hits, the team usually romps to victory. When he is not hitting, wins come hard.

Chances are that the permanent damage to the knee will force Mantle to retire in his early 30s, not too many years in the future, without his ever realizing the glorious achievements that once seemed certain to be his.

At the moment, Mickey's ailment, along with Ford's lack of consistency, are factors to be taken into consideration in analyzing the Yankees' chances of winning the pennant this year. It seems to me that exuberant Yankee fans should display more caution.
