Announce Increase In Hebrew Program At Temple Beth Am

Jack Mossberg, chairman of the Beth Am school committee, announced at the board of directors meeting of the Bureau of Jewish Education that beginning with the new term his school will increase the hours of its Hebrew School Program from 4½ hours per week to 5½ hours per week. "Our aim", said Mr. Mossberg, "is to intensify our program by producing added hours of instruction."

Alter Boyman, president of the Bureau, in commending the school on its action pointed out that this is a welcome and an important trend in the community toward strengthening Jewish Educational Programs.

In the area of standards for Bar Mitzvah at least seven Congregations require a minimum number of years of study in Hebrew School before a boy can become Bar Mitzvah on a Sabbath morning in the Synagogue. This standard is being developed in the schools by the Bureau of Jewish Education in cooperation with the Rhode Island Rabbinical Association.

Russia To Publish Works In Yiddish

PARIS -- For the first time in a number of years, two works by Jewish writers will be published in Yiddish soon in the Soviet Union, it was reported here from Moscow by the Neue Presse, Yiddish Communist paper. The paper said that a volume by David Bergelson and a volume of poetry by Ascher Schwartzman are due to appear in the Soviet capital. Both authors are dead.

It was also reported that a number of works by Yiddish writers will appear in Russian translation during the coming week. Translating of two volumes of works by David Bergelson and one of poetry by Perez Markish are in preparation. Both authors were among the several hundred Jewish intellectuals liquidated in Russia under the Stalin regime.

To Hold Symposium On Needs Of Man

CHICAGO — The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and Loyola University will hold a one-day symposium entitled "The Needs and Images of Man" on March 7.

Roman Catholic and Jewish sociologists, political theorists, authors and literary critics will discuss the "community of interests" that link the American Jew and Catholic.

Details were outlined this week by the Rev. Robert W. Mulligan, vice president and dean of faculties of the Catholic School, and A. Abbot Rosen, midwest director for the Jewish organization.

"We believe that this unique conference will contribute greatly to social progress, for it will enable the American Jew and the American Catholic to meet in a manner never before attempted," Father Mulligan said.

Senator Fulbright Criticizes Israel

WASHINGTON — Chairman J. W. Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, took the Senate floor last week to criticize Israel — alleging that Israel practices undemocratic censorship — and to reveal the contents of private correspondence with Israel Ambassador Avraham Harman.

Senator Fulbright, Arkansas Democrat, told the Senate that "last spring after I had visited the Middle East I was taken severely to task by the Israeli Prime Minister because I referred to censorship in Israel." As a result, he said, he exchanged correspondence with the Israel Government to make known his displeasure at such criticism.

Senator Fulbright revealed anger, in the correspondence made public last week, at Israeli allegations that he misrepresented facts and made statements "apt to be misleading." Defending his charges, Sen. Fulbright's correspondence insisted that Israel censored the press, "invaded the Sinai Peninsula," violated United Nations Armistice agreements, and sought to minimize the actual number of Arab refugees as enumerated by the United Nations.

Senator Fulbright informed the Senate of criticism of himself by Mr. Ben-Gurion and quoted Mr. Ben-Gurion's statement that, "There was no basis for such talk by a responsible person who heads the Foreign Relations Committee of such an august institution as the U. S. Senate."

Continuing his attack on Israel, Sen. Fulbright brought the controversy up to date by inserting into the Congressional Record a number of news dispatches from Israel and Cyprus, published in The New York Times and Washington Post within the last month.

Police Break Up Red Demonstration

TEL AVIV — Police last week broke up a demonstration by some 300 Communists who were marching towards the Belgian Embassy to protest the killing of deposed Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba. The Communists, who were carrying banners reading "Death to the Lumumba Killers," and "Down with Hammarskjold," were finally dispersed after four of the demonstrators were arrested. The incident was followed by sporadic clashes between police and pro-Lumumba demonstrators along Tel Aviv's most crowded thoroughfare before quiet was restored.

Dr. Hans Globke Defends Decision To Work For Nazis

FRANKFURT — Dr. Hans Globke, State Secretary to Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, asserted last week he had pretended to be friendly to the nazis and had been able to prevent even more drastic anti-Jewish legislation by remaining in office during the nazi regime.

Globke, who has been under heavy fire for some time on charges of participating in the nazi anti-Jewish campaign, made the statement in an interview with the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in defending his decision to stay in the Ministry of the Interior after the nazis seized power in 1933.

Discussing charges that his commentary to the Nuremberg laws had worsened their application to the Jews, Globke said that he was then aware that his commentary might be misinterpreted later and added, "If I had foreseen the later development of the Jewish question, I would not have written the commentary." He insisted, however, that the commentary had softened some of the harsher nazi measures.

He also argued that he had been able to help many persons persecuted by the nazis while serving in the Interior Ministry and that he had during that time maintained close connections with many clergymen and leaders of the resistance movement.

Rejects Charges
He emphatically rejected charges, made by Dr. Max Merens, the former nazi war administrator in occupied Greece, that he had intervened to prevent the liberation of 10,000 Jewish men, women and children from Salonika. He also told the Hamburg newspaper, Die Welt, that he was denying outright recent allegations that, as an official in the nazi government, he had been in touch with Adolf Eichmann.

Dr. Fritz Bauer, the Attorney General of Hesse, said here that the refusal of Eichmann to testify to the allegation that Globke had prevented the liberation of the 10,000 Greek Jews ended the connection of an investigation of the charge by his office. He added that he had turned over the investigation against Globke to the prosecution office in Bonn.

Bauer said Eichmann had refused, on advice of his counsel, Robert Servatius, to answer the question in his prison cell about Globke.

SET PILOT PLANT
JERUSALEM — The cornerstone for a pilot plant for desalination of sea water at Eilat will be laid at the end of March, Mordechai Bentov, the Development Minister, informed President Ben-Zvi last week. The plant will be based on the process developed by Alexander Zarchin, the former Soviet scientist.

Moes Chitim Fund Sets Goal Of $7500 For Passover Drive

The fourth annual appeal for Passover assistance was launched this week by the United Moes Chitim Fund of Greater Providence. Edmund Wexler, Fund president, said that a goal of $7,500 has been set since there is greater need this year due to economic conditions and rising food costs.

The Moes Chitim Fund or Passover Relief is a combination of several appeals. Last year 200 families and individuals residing in the community were beneficiaries. In addition, the Ladies Festival Committee was allocated funds to conduct Seders and distribute Passover food to the 200 residents at the State Institutions at Howard and Exeter.

The Jewish Family and Children's Service offers secretarial and staff service free of charge. The only cost of the appeal is printing and postage.

John Newman, treasurer, said that contributions may be mailed directly to the Fund, care of the Jewish Family and Children's Service at 100 North Main Street, Providence.

Expect Fight Over Histadrut Power In State Of Israel

JERUSALEM — Aharon Becker, who became acting secretary general of Histadrut last week, is expected to battle as tenaciously as Pinhas Lavon, his predecessor, for the rights of the Israeli labor federation against the state, according to a New York Times article by Lawrence Fellows.

Premier David Ben-Gurion, who won a battle last week for Mr. Lavon's removal from the Histadrut post, believes the state cannot endure an organization as powerful as Histadrut in its midst. Others, such as Mr. Lavon, speak of the need for cooperation between Histadrut and the state.

Thus, if Israel has settled the so-called Lavon affair, she has not settled the many other arguments that got caught up in the dispute in four and a half months of acrimonious public debate.

Last week the executive committee of Histadrut accepted the resignation of Mr. Lavon as the labor federation's secretary general.

A large minority wanted to keep him on, but the dominant Mapai party voted unanimously to remove Mr. Lavon and thus met the condition laid down by Mr. Ben-Gurion for his return to the head of the party and the Government.

Mr. Ben-Gurion resigned recently as Premier on the ground that he could not accept a ruling by his coalition Cabinet exonerating Mr. Lavon from any responsibility in a disastrous 1954 security adventure.

Mr. Becker, head of the Trade Unions Department of Histadrut, is expected to get the post of secretary general permanently.

Mr. Ben-Gurion, like almost everyone in Mapai, has his roots

Hebrew Day School Refuses Merger With Synagogue

In a letter addressed to Abraham Linder, president of Congregation Mishkan Tfilah, from Joseph Dubin, president of the Providence Hebrew Day School, the merger contemplated by the Congregation with the school was refused by the school board.

According to Mr. Dubin's letter "It was felt that the best interest of the school would be served by pursuing an independent path."

The letter reads in full:

Dear Mr. Linder:
At the Board meeting of the Providence Hebrew Day School held on January 26th a complete and thorough soul searching of the contemplated merger of the Synagogue and the School took place. It was felt that the best interest of the school would be served by pursuing an independent path despite the many advantages that would be gained by a structural affiliation of the two bodies.

We know how sincere and honest the synagogue was in the negotiations and feel that the committees of the synagogue wholeheartedly expanded much valuable time and effort towards the school as well as the synagogue; but in the best interest of the children because the limited area in which we have to build it was felt that the expansion possibilities of the school would be nullified and thus eventually the children would be the ones to suffer.

The details of the negotiations actually had nothing to do with the decision of the school as in the overall and broadest viewpoint of the future of the school and its children. It was felt they would best be served by the school proceeding on its own.

We wish to thank you from the bottom of our hearts for your many hours of efforts and consideration.

Joseph M. Finkle, chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of Greater Providence and a member of the Rhode Island Commission against Discrimination will speak at services at Congregation B'nai Israel in Woonsocket tonight.

deep in Histadrut. He once was secretary general and steered Mr. Lavon through the federation's ranks when Mr. Lavon was looked on as a likely successor to Mr. Ben-Gurion.

Histadrut was formed in Haifa in 1920 by 100 immigrants attending what they called the first assembly of Jewish workers. They had been living under difficult conditions in swamp or desert, without factories, schools or hospitals.

Histadrut grew tremendously. It embraces all trade union activity and handles 73 per cent of Israel's farm production, 40 per cent of the building activity and more than 20 per cent of the nation's industrial output.

The federation runs health insurance projects in Israel, distributing and marketing cooperatives and, together with the Jewish Agency, it owns the Zim Maritime Company.

Mapal and other interested parties have been engaged in a continuing debate over the role of Histadrut in a Socialist state such as Israel.

In practice, the lines of debate are not so clearly defined as the positions of Mr. Ben-Gurion and Mr. Lavon. At one point last year, Mr. Lavon had no objection to transferring the health insurance plan to the state, but he later switched his position to keep peace among the factions in Histadrut.

Even after the Lavon affair gained momentum, both Premier Ben-Gurion and Mr. Lavon maintained their position that secon-

Sholom Secunda Owns Rights To Hit Song Again

NEW YORK — Sholom Secunda, who sold the rights to his "Bei Mir Bist Du Schon" for $30 soon after he wrote it and then watched other people get rich from it for two decades, became the owner again last week of his international hit song when the copyright was reverted to him. Under United States law, a copyright expires after 28 years and can be renewed only by the author or composer or by someone he designates.

For the first time since he wrote it in 1937, Mr. Secunda will begin to share in its continuing earnings. He signed a contract with Harms, Inc., the music publisher which promoted the song into international fame. Mr. Secunda, under the agreement, will get about $5,000 in royalties. If he had kept the copyright, he would have received more than $300,000 by this time.

The 66-year-old composer of Yiddish musicals for the Second Avenue theater in Manhattan was not embittered, however. He said the loss bothered "everyone else more than it bothered me." Anyway, he said, he didn't think much of the hit tune as compared to some of his symphonic compositions.

Mr. Secunda composed the music for the song as he was walking with his wife on a Far Rockaway boardwalk. He and his lyricist needed a theme song for Yiddish musical they had written. A few years later, Mr. Secunda was offered $30 for it which he accepted. The next thing he knew, the melody was being sung by an unknown trio called the Andrew Sisters. It has since sold 250,000 copies in sheet music and 2,500,000 records.

dary-school teachers had no right to the recognition they had been demanding to bargain collectively in their own interests. A Histadrut union bargains in their behalf.

The fight between the state and Histadrut, often referred to here as the "great debate," will probably go on after the Lavon affair much as it did before.

Meanwhile, Histadrut has continued to grow. Its membership last year rose to 713,000, from 687,597.

Beyond the "great debate" over Histadrut's role, another unsettled issue involved in the Lavon affair is the question of Mr. Ben-Gurion's eventual successor as Premier. Mr. Ben-Gurion has been steering Shimon Peres, Deputy Minister in 1954. Mr. Peres was then director general in the defense establishment and General Dayan was chief of staff. They testified against Mr. Lavon in an inquiry that preceded his resignation as Defense Minister in February, 1955.

There was no proof that the two officials had anything to do with forgeries and false testimony brought in evidence against Mr. Lavon during that inquiry to give the impression that he had ordered the 1954 adventure that eventually cost Israeli lives.

(The adventure is believed to have involved a spy ring in Cairo discovered by the Egyptians.)

Yet the two men have been targets of much of Mr. Lavon's abuse in his years of struggle to clear himself of blame for that old adventure.

Problem In Russia Is Unequal Treatment Says Goldmann

NEW YORK — The problem of the Jewish community in Soviet Russia is not one of discrimination against the Jewish individual as a citizen but one of unequal treatment of the Jewish minority as a whole — Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization declared at a press conference here last week.

Dr. Goldmann deplored the fact that in discussing this issue at the recent meeting of the United Nations Human Rights Subcommittee too much stress was placed on anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union.

While it is true, Dr. Goldmann on anti-Semitism in the Soviet and that some of the anti-religious articles in the Soviet press manifest an anti-Jewish tenor, he felt, nevertheless, that to accuse the Soviet Union generally of anti-Semitism is unjustified and distorts the character of the real issue.

The issue is not discrimination of the Jewish individual but the denial to the Jewish community of the same facilities accorded other religious and national minorities," he said. "It is on this issue that all efforts must concentrate. On it depends the existence of the large Jewish community in the Soviet Union as a distant group."

He added that there were signs indicating that the Soviet leaders begin to realize the existence of the problem. "Although one has to be careful in evaluating the situation, one may hope that a certain improvement may develop," he stated.

'With A Tallis, I Can Die'

By Patricia Blake

"How in the world do you expect to make contact with the Orthodox community in Russia?" asked the New York rabbi to whom I had come for advice. "You don't look Jewish, you don't act Jewish, you don't talk Jewish—and besides, you're a woman. For that reason alone, Orthodox men won't have anything to do with you." I agreed it was probably hopeless. Then the rabbi had an idea. "Take some tallisim, the shawls Jews wear when they pray; they are priceless in Russia. Present them to the rabbis in the synagogues. They will probably have a few words with you then."

Three days later I landed at Moscow's Vnukovo Airport carrying a parcel that greatly puzzled a customs official. "Komu eto nuzhno? Who needs that?" he asked, fingering a dozen identical black-and-white woolen shawls. "I do!" I answered, hugging myself and shivering. "I'm cold-blooded. What miserable weather in Moscow!" He concurred about the weather; it was fifteen degrees below zero. I got through with my shawls.

During the next six weeks I left the tallisim locked in a suitcase in my hotel room while I went about other business. I had come to Russia to write a series of articles on various religious faiths, and knowing the susceptibility of Soviet officials on the Jewish question, I decided to start with Christians. I reasoned that if I were to tangle with the authorities, it would be best to do so toward the end of my assignment.

The time passed agreeably. I interviewed metropolitans in cloth-of-gold vestments, chatted with bejeweled bishops, and exchanged wishes for peace and friendship with tonsured deacons. I visited the resplendent monastery and theological school at Zagorsk, and two fine convents in Kiev. At the fourth century Holy See of the Armenian Apostolic Church in Echmiadzin, I inspected a brand-new printing press for theological literature, donated by Armenian-Americans. As Easter approached I marveled at the great banks of hothouse flowers massed before the splendid gilded altars of Russia's cathedrals.

Then one Saturday morning I attended the first Jewish Orthodox service of my life, in one of Moscow's three synagogues. This was a small ramshackle wooden structure in the center of a muddy courtyard. I climbed upstairs at once to the gallery where women are kept separated from men by ritual law. Here some twenty middle-aged and elderly women crooked around me; when I told them I was an American Jew, they squeezed and petted me. My ignorance of Yiddish did not bother them a bit. "Our young people don't know it either," said one, stroking my hair. They questioned me in Russian. By chance did I know their relatives in Brooklyn, in the Bronx, in Chicago? Anyway, would I get in touch with them and tell them they were alive and safe? Was there as much anti-Semitism in America as in Russia? Would there be war? Had Dulles been a Jew? My astonishment at this last question was matched by their disappointment at my answer. How they had trusted him, believed in him! Some form of the word "Dulles," it seemed, means "poverty" in Yiddish. When they asked for confirmation of Eisenhower's, Rockefeller's, and Harriman's Jewishness, I did not have the heart to deny it. They had personal questions for me, too. What did my father do? Where was I staying in Moscow? Was I married? My reply to this last question provoked a chorus of horrified "Oil And why not?"

Downstairs in the men's part of the synagogue, the atmosphere was not nearly so heartening. A score of bearded, weary-looking old men sat huddled in their overcoats. A few wore tattered remnants of tallisim. Some were reading from oilcloth-bound prayer books which, I latter noted, dated from the last century. Instead of the traditional black yamulka, they wore scruffy fur hats or brightly patterned Central Asian skullcaps that cost only a few rubles at any Moscow department store. They sat on wooden benches swaying in prayer. Occasionally a man would rise and stride up and down the aisle, voicing a series of anguished sounding cries.

After the service I made my way downstairs. Here I was greeted with looks of unconcealed hostility. As a woman, I knew I was not welcome in the synagogue proper. As a plainly identifiable foreigner, I evidently spelled trouble for the congregation. Nevertheless I approached the rabbi, who was rocking back and forth in his pulpit under a bare light bulb. "What do you want?" he asked loudly. I said that I wanted nothing; I was a Jewish woman from New York who had brought him a present. A tallis. I held the package out to him. "If you are a Jewish woman from New York, you should know that you cannot carry packages on the Sabbath. Besides," his voice rose to a shout, "we want for nothing in the Soviet Union! We have everything we need in the Soviet Union. Everything, you understand, everything!"

I retreated, appalled by this demonstration of fear. Then the rabbi called me back, softly now. "Since you have brought a tallis, it would be absurd to take it away," he reasoned with fine Talmudic logic. "Please put it on the bench beside you and leave us alone." Early in the evening of that same Sabbath I sat at my dressing table in my hotel room, putting polish on my fingernails. Thoroughly unsettled by the morning's events, I was concentrating on the evening ahead; a dinner party and dance at the British embassy. I had put on a strapless red satin dress and long, tinkling rhinestone earrings. Frank Sinatra crooned familiarly on my short-wave radio, and I hummed along with him. When a knock on the door roused me from these diversions, I hobbled to the door in my short sheath skirt, waving my hands to dry my nails.

On the threshold stood a tiny bearded old party wearing an ankle-length brown leather coat. From under his outsize black felt hat flowed luxuriant white earlocks. Standing waist-high to me in my spike heels, this astonishing person addressed me in a torrent of Yiddish. I caught one word: tallis. Some of my woman friends in the synagogue had evidently told him where I was staying, and he had come to plead for one of the shawls in which Orthodox Jews have for centuries wrapped themselves at the time of prayer and at the time of death. For this he had braved the cordon of militiamen and secret police around my tourist hotel, and allowed himself to be observed by one of the floor matrons who take note of all comings and goings. And he was fated to leave the hotel empty-handed. I could not risk his being searched at the door; we might both be arrested for black-marketeering in religious articles. How would I be able to prove I had not sold him a shawl?

Yet there was nothing to do but invite the old man in. He refused to take off his coat and hat, but when I offered him some Scotch he poured himself a glass and drank it in one shot, like vodka, sweat coursing down the creases of his face. We sat in silence for a long, excruciating moment, while my tight dress crept up above my knees. I felt utterly naked. By puritanical Soviet standards I knew I looked strictly nekulturny, and to this old gentleman I supposed I appeared a scarlet woman. His eyes were lowered as he repeated, in Russian, his request for a tallis. In answer, I pointed to the ventilator in the ceiling, where I suspected bugging apparatus might be concealed, then cupped my hands over my ears.

"Are you telling me this place is full of spies!" he yelled. "Don't you suppose I know all about it? What can they do to me? I'm seventy-four years old, I'm retired; I've no job to be fired from. My whole family was killed by the Germans. With a tallis, I can die," I fetched a piece of paper on which I fixed a rendezvous with him elsewhere. He would have a shawl, I wrote.

Content with this promise, the old man wanted to chat. When I had covered my nakedness with a coat, he told me that his granddaughter would have been about my age now, had she lived. Wouldn't I like to come home with him and have a nice Jewish dinner? Gefilte fish and tsimmes? This very night even! I refused gently, sorrowfully, whispering that we would undoubtedly be followed. And indeed, some people were already taking an interest in our encounter. During the next half hour certain members of the hotel staff, unbidden and without knocking, entered my room with master keys. The maid exchanged one set of clean towels for another; the waiter made the same maneuver with glasses; the bellboy brought me a copy of "Evening Moscow"; the plumber, to whom I had vainly appealed for two days, appeared with a plunger and began draining the bathtub in long, sickening gurgitations.

During this last intrusion I told the old man about a western newspaperman in Moscow who uses his talents as a mimic to bemuse the hotel staff. Alone in his room, he carries on conversations with himself in a variety of accents and intonations, thus provoking frenzied forays by the personnel. The old man seemed to get the point at last. He rose and gave me a warm, reassuring smile and a not so reassuring farewell; "Don't worry, little lady," he said, "I'll come back."

He came. And so did, at my reckoning, ten others—all on the same mission. Some missed me; in the evenings when I returned to the hotel after dinner, the floor matron would often greet me with a deadpan "Another Jew was here to see you tonight." All those I met got their tallisim in one way or another, and then dropped out of sight. Only my first visitor was faithful. He appeared again and again at my door, usually around midnight, with gifts: a small jar of chicken fat, a bag of sugar-coated cranberries, a can of herring, and during Passover, great boxes of hard-to-get matzot which I kept, uneaten, on the top shelf of my closet. "Why are you so thin?" he would scold. "Eat! Does your mother realize that you're running around all over the world by yourself, not eating enough to keep a nightingale alive?"

Friends by now, the old man and I grew philosophical about our troubles. He had been questioned by the police and then released. As for me, after his first visit I had been continually tailed by plainclothesmen in cars and on foot. Moreover, the authorities were being unusually unco-operative about granting me permission to travel or to visit places not on the Moscow tourist circuit. "Nu," mused the old man, "so maybe you've entered the Pale?"

On my last night in Russia the old man came to say good-by, carrying a package somewhat larger than usual. He unwrapped it and presented me with a pair of enormous gray felt carpet slippers. "Here," he said, "when you return to New York, marry a nice Jewish boy. Make a good home for him. These slippers will be more comfortable in the kitchen than those," and he pointed at a pile of high-heeled shoes I had been packing. I leaned over and hugged him.

"Moya dochka, my daughter," he whispered, "I shall miss you." I felt the whole of his frail little person sobbing against me.

"But I'll come back to Russia soon," I said consolingly. "You'll see, we'll meet again."

He broke from my embrace and, throwing his head back, uttered a single aching wail. "No! No!" he shouted. Then for a moment my gentle gnome loomed before me like a formidable patriarch. "Give me your father's address," he commanded. I obeyed. "I shall write your father and tell him to forbid you to return to Russia." He strode to the door. "Sholom aleichem, peace be with you," he said, and without a backward look he let himself out.

CONFISCATE DOCUMENTS
MUNICH — Documents dealing with the activities during the nazi regime of Dr. Hans Globke which were intended as part of an "Eichmann documentary" exhibit which opened here recently, have been confiscated by order of a lower court.

Visitors to the opening of the exhibit, which was sponsored by the Association of Victims of Nazism, witnessed a scuffle when the court order was executed as West German journalists tried to prevent an East German television team from filming the scenes. Newspapers close to the Government Christian Democratic Party published an interview last week in which Globke asserted that he had been able to prevent even more drastic anti-Jewish legislation by remaining in office during the nazi regime. His interview was called a "one sided attempt at self-justification" by the Social Democratic Information Service, which stressed that Globke had left open some "doubtful aspects" of his activities in the nazi Interior Ministry.

To Give Lecture — Rabbi Arthur Zuckerman, director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at the College of the City of New York, will give the final lecture in the Helal Hassenfeld Lecture series sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation and the Religious Studies Department at Brown University. The lecture will be held on Tuesday at 8:15 P.M. in the Carmichael Auditorium of the new Psychology Building (next to Faunce House) on Waterman Street.

Rabbi Zuckerman will deliver a lecture on Reconstructionism. Rabbi Nathan N. Rosen, Hillel director at Brown University will preside. Reverend Charles Baldwin, chaplain of the University, will introduce the guest speaker.

PROTEST ABUSES

NEW YORK — The American Jewish organizations last week appealed to the Moroccan Government to end the "campaign of persecution and terror" against the country's 200,000 Jews.

The appeal asked the end of arbitrary arrest, detention and abuse of Jews, removal of barriers to their emigration to Israel and resumption of postal communications with Israel.

Knesset Rebukes Police For Handling Of Crowds

JERUSALEM — Israel's Parliament rebuked police officials last week for their behavior in dispersing crowds who gathered when the Mapai Central Committee met on Feb. 4 to vote the ouster of Pinhas Lavon as secretary-general of the Histadrut, Israel's Labor Federation.

The rebuke consisted of submitting the issue to a House Committee after the General Zionists, the Mapam and the Herut passed motions on the police action. These asserted that when students demonstrated against the Lavon ouster, police plainclothesmen joined Mapai party ushers to disperse the crowd.

The motions also contained a charge that the plainclothesmen wielded hidden batons against the noisier demonstrators.

The deputies asserted that the public must always be able to identify policemen and that when auxiliary police of party ushers exercise authority outside of the premises, they should wear clearly visible armbands or badges "in order to avoid hooliganism."

Police Minister Behor Shitreet admitted that six or seven plainclothesmen were among the uniformed police who used batons.

Opens Mass Campaign For Settling In Israel

TEL AVIV — The Klausenberg Rebbe opened his mass campaign for immediate settling of all of his followers in Israel last week with an address to a mass meeting of more than 15,000 persons in B'nai Brak, the Orthodox town near Tel Aviv. A substantial group of the ultra-Orthodox zealots of the Natorei Karta lives in B'nai Brak.

Rabbi Halberstein spoke with enthusiasm about the desire for settlement which he said existed among Orthodox Jews in the United States and unfolded plans for more Orthodox settlements in Israel.

He called on Orthodox Jews in the free countries to fulfill the goal of immigration "which they so cherish" and come in Israel to settle. The Klausenberg Rebbe came to Israel several years ago.

REFUTES DEFENSE

NEW YORK — Eichmann's claim that he was only a cog in the nazi machine which exterminated 6,000,000 Jews was refuted by the World Jewish Congress last week in a 10,000-word study entitled "Eichmann — Master of the Nazi Murder Machine."

The glass wall will be taken into Eichmann's cell to divide it into two sections for meetings between the Cologne attorney and the former Gestapo colonel. The two men will be able to see each other but will not be able to transmit any objects, such as documents, to each other.

Conversation will be through microphones and earphones on both sides of the glass wall.

Go After the Kind of People You Want in Your Store

BUSINESS is a battle. And the master of business is the man who thinks—plans—directs the fight with the cool and calculating eye of an experienced general. Competition is daily becoming keener in every line of trade. Scientific methods are demanded in every department of business. And all commercial organizations lead to definite and centralized effort.

In no other feature of modern business is the expediency of concentration so universally emphasized as in the advertising end. Topsy-turvy publicity will quickly eat up the profits. In order to create a demand for an article through newspaper advertising you must first formulate a specific proposition for the right people.

This accomplished, you next seek an economical and efficient vehicle of publicity for the marketing of your goods. The selection of your medium should be made with regard to the character of the merchandise you are offering. If you are engaged in distributing goods of the better grade, you know that your logical field of sale is that of the substantial, prosperous class of people—the folks who can appreciate and afford your wares.

Your problem is to reach possible buyers —and no others.

Maximum results at minimum cost — that's The Herald's claim on your advertising appropriation.

JDC Expands Aid To Aged And Sick

TEL AVIV — Malben, the branch of the Joint Distribution Committee in Israel which is taking care of sick, aged and handicapped immigrants, in 1961 will spend $18,500,000 Israeli pounds — approximately $10,300,000 — for its activities. It was announced here by Louis Horwitz, Malben director. "More than 42,000 persons will benefit this year from Malben aid, as compared with 20,000 in 1960," Horwitz stated.

He said that in 1961 Malben will embark on a new project — aiding the development of national services for chronically ill. It will also triple its contribution to the national tuberculosis program in Israel and would increase its aid to aged people in the Malben institutions, in addition to continuing its regular aid program.

The Joint Distribution Committee is a beneficiary agency of the United Jewish Fund and Council of Columbus, Ohio.

REWARD FOR MENGELE

FRANKFURT — Dr. Fritz Baur, the Attorney General of Hesse, offered last week a reward of $4,475 for information leading to the arrest of Dr. Josef Mengele, the "selection" doctor at the Auschwitz concentration camp.

He said investigations conducted by the Frankfurt Prosecution office against persons involved in crimes at the Auschwitz camp had revealed that Mengele was still alive and last reported living in Argentina.

A Jewish film producer, Arthur Brauner, said in Berlin that he would offer a $2,380 reward for Mengele's capture.

VOYAGE TO ISRAEL

Two voyages next month by the crack Israel-flag liners S/S JERUSALEM and S/S ZION of the Zim Lines, will bring close to 1000 Americans to Israel on the eve of Passover and in ample time to join the gala Yom Haatzmaut (Independence Day) celebrations marking the 13th anniversary of Israel's statehood and the beginning of the Bar Mitzvah Year.

A spokesman for the Zim Lines said that some choice space in Tourist Class is still available for both sailings. He added, however, that bookings are exceptionally heavy this year owing to the desire of many Americans to be in Israel for both Passover and Yom Haatzmaut. The latter falls on Thursday, April 20th and will be marked by fireworks, military parades, Independence Balls and other public events. Passengers unable to make the March 15th or March 17th sailings may leave New York aboard the S/S ISRAEL on April 5th, arriving at Haifa on April 19th, in time for Independence Day.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon Goldstein were married on Dec. 25 at the Dorchester Plaza, Dorchester, Mass. Mrs. Goldstein is the former Miss Sandra Fine.

Discusses Reasons For Conversion To Judaism

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Having become an expert on the conversion of glamorous movie stars by leading Elizabeth Taylor and Mae Britt into the Jewish fold, Rabbi Max Nussbaum of Hollywood's Temple Israel ascribes the undoubted attraction of Judaism to men and women of other faiths that intelligent Americans find the Jewish religion sensible, logical, wise and impregnated with great human and liberal values, at the same time making no excessive demands on their credulity.

Profound Convictions

Elizabeth Taylor and Mae Britt were actuated by profound spiritual convictions, studied Judaism many months and know more about most aspects of it than the average Jew-by-birth, Rabbi Nussbaum said.

Elizabeth Taylor was interested in Judaism even before she married Mike Todd.

Three months before the end of Elizabeth's Judaic course, her friendship with Eddie Fisher had become serious and Eddie used to join her in the lessons. Rabbi Nussbaum married them at the Temple in Las Vegas. Despite a strong Jewish background Fisher knows far less about matters Jewish than his wife.

When the question of converting Mae Britt arose, Rabbi Nussbaum came under great pressure — from non-Jews as well as Jews — to refuse, because her intention of marrying a colored convert to Judaism, the entertainer Sammy Davis. He rejected the demands of the intolerant, once he was satisfied that Mae's interest was genuine.

Mae came from a Lutheran household. She studied two months with one of Rabbi Nussbaum's pupils before she made up her mind to be converted and he agreed to accept her. She then completed the full course of instruction.

Hollywood Rabbi

Rabbi Nussbaum, who ministers to the spiritual needs of the stars and their satellites — the producers, writers and directors, could easily play the part of a rabbi in any Hollywood film. He is tall, grey, distinguished and impressive in appearance, selecting his words with great care.

Rabbi Nussbaum was born in Germany and was the last rabbi to leave Berlin, making his escape as late as 1940. Stephen Wise helped him to obtain a post as a professor of philosophy at a Midwestern university.

Jewish National Fund To Attempt Reclamation Of 625,000 Acres

WASHINGTON — The Jewish National Fund of America approved a plan last week for the reclamation of 625,000 acres in Israel that will involve the settlement of 100,000 families at a cost of $250,000,000 over the next twenty years according to Irving Spiegel in the New York Times.

Action on this development program was taken at the fund's triennial national assembly at the Willard Hotel. Its details were outlined by Jacob Tsur, world chairman of the Jewish fund that has its headquarters in Jerusalem. The fund, the land-development arm of the World Zionist Organization in Israel, has affiliates in thirty-eight countries.

The affiliate in this country pledged $5,000,000 annually and more for the next twenty years toward the world-wide goal of $250,000,000. The rest will be raised by Jewish communities in the West. Last December, Israel's Knesset (Parliament) designated the fund as the sole accredited agency for soil amelioration, land development and afforestation for Israel.

Mr. Tsur, former Israeli Ambassador to France and the Argentine, pointed out that 60 per cent of his nation's territory "is wasteland," located in the southern part of the Negev and in the mountains of Galilee and the rocky Judean Hills.

A feature of the fund's reclamation project calls for the planting of 250,000,000 trees in the eroded areas. Mr. Tsur said that the vast stretches of barren land would be prepared for the settlement of about 500,000 persons.

Mr. Tsur said it was necessary to convert 200,000 acres of wasteland in the hills of Galilee and Judea to be utilized for agricultural settlements. He noted that other acres could be used for afforestation. He emphasized that this conversion "can change the face of the country."

"Perhaps," he asserted, "one day we shall deserve the same compliments that have been paid to the Dutch who drained off the sea to win more land for their fertile fields."

Mr. Tsur stressed that the fulfillment of the fund's plan "would double Israel's territory within her present boundaries without resorting to war."

The plan also calls for the building of 2,000 miles of road through the reclaimed areas. At the present time, Israel has 600 agricultural settlements. Under the new plan, 100 more settlements will be added. Groups of ten settlements, according to the plan, will be served by strategically located urban centers that will minister to the needs of the new settlers through hospitals, schools and shopping facilities.

Mr. Tsur appealed to American Jewish youth to go to Israel for short-term periods to contribute their knowledge and skills to the twenty-year plan.

"It is a long-term program," he said, "but we must remember that we have not an unlimited time. Every year we must make increasing strides so that we may know that every inch of land in Israel is truly ours."

Many Hebrew Manuscripts Available On Microfilm

NEW YORK — A large collection of Hebrew manuscripts on microfilm, representing about 30 per cent of all known important works, is now available to scholars at the Jewish Theological Seminary, 3080 Broadway according to a New York Times article by Sanka Knox.

The collection, with more than 750 microfilm reels, each containing several manuscripts, has been in the making since 1953. Dr. Simon Greenberg, vice chancellor of the seminary, estimated that by 1966 the collection would encompass all known manuscripts in the field.

Established in memory of Dr. Louis Ginsberg, Professor of Talmud and Bible at the seminary from 1902 to his death in 1953, the microfilm collection is said to be the first such project in this country.

Available now are microfilm copies of all the Hebrew manuscript collections in the British Museum, which contains 2,700 items, of the entire 1,500 in the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris and the 500-item collection in the Bibliotheque d'Alliance.

Other Collections

Nearly half of the Oxford and Cambridge university collections have been garnered and portions from Vatican libraries, and others in Rome, Leningrad, Munich, Amsterdam, Berlin, Frankfurt, Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Vienna.

The seminary's film library, Dr. Greenberg said, "is the most important project for furthering Jewish scholarship in existence today, with potential consequences for future scholarship that are incalculable."

The collected has already enabled scholars to bring together separated leaves of manuscripts and form a whole, and to compile authentic texts of hitherto incomplete or inaccurate works by comparing variant versions.

One of the high points achieved by the collection is the bringing together, for the first time, of all the manuscripts of the Cairo Genizah—a treasure house of materials that had been stored for centuries in an old synagogue in Egypt, and then divided among a number of libraries.

Even before the major division, some texts and fragments had gone to a variety of libraries. Now, all are on film at the seminary. A reconstruction of the history of trade in the Mediterranean during the Middle Ages, refuting formerly held concepts of communications, will eventually result from one study made possible by the reassembled Cairo Genizah, Dr. Greenberg said.

Lost passages have been found in the microfilm record: unidentified fragments that were spread over three continents are now documented and previously unknown variant versions of important works.

Hitherto unknown parts of a work by Abraham, son of Maimonides, turned up in the record as well as four pages of an ancient ritual code, which supplements two pages of the same code, discovered thirty years ago.

In Hollywood . . .

By Barney Glazer

Hollywood, Calif. — A sudden surge of reader reaction disagrees with my Oscar prediction that Ernest Gold's "Exodus" will win it for the best score and "Never on Sunday" will take the best song honors. These readers favor Dimitri Tiomkin's "Alamo" for the best score Oscar. They're placing chips on Tiomkin's and Paul Francis Webster's "The Green Leaves of Summer" in the best song category. . . . Oddly enough, both Ernest Gold and Dimitri Tiomkin are half-Jewish. . . . A letter from a reader says he hopes it isn't true that Efreim Zimbalist, Jr., is converting to Catholicism. Obviously, my reader mistakenly believes that Efreim is Jewish. He is Protestant Episcopalian and his children are being raised in the same faith. It is true, Efreim advises me, that he actually began instructions last year to convert to Catholicism but decided to discontinue.

Cheers to ABC-TV's newscaster Ray Irwin for his fearless exposure of Nazi hate publications, which he feels can be knocked off with open publicity, not silence as we've been using until now. . . . Abe Schiller, Executive Vice President of the Flamingo Hotel, Las Vegas, appeared at the Hialeah race track in Florida dressed in the hotel's traditional color theme—pink. Abe wore pink 10-gallon hat, pink outfit, and pink boots, but he couldn't find a pink horse, and he tried!

Don't be surprised if Gogi Grant sings a full evening of Yiddish songs at the Metropolitan Opera in New York. . . . At a recent kibitz banquet, Jeff Chandler was introduced by Roastmaster George Jessel as "the only full-fledged Jewish Indian chief in America." (Jeff won that honor as the result of the dozens of Indian roles he played in films.)

ALTHOUGH Rosalind Russell won the movie role as the Yiddish momma in "Majority of One," I'm amazed that Gertrude Berg wasn't cast. She'd be a natural. If Rosalind comes through convincingly, I'll be the first to apologize. Real reason why Roz got the nod over Gertrude is that Roz can make the movie turnstiles click. The fans will pay to see her, regardless of the vehicle.

DAVE BARRY, one of our top comedians, was very funny in his Coconut Grove stand, viz: "My wife is on a diet. She takes pills to paralyze her mouth" . . . "Everybody thinks I'm related to Gene Barry, the television star. His name is Weinstein and mine is Segal" . . . "I went to Israel recently to help raise money for the United States" . . . "In Israel, the kids paint Mogen Davids on Volkswagens" . . . "Israel airlines use an old grandma hostess who walks around saying: 'Eat it! I made it myself!'"

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

by Sylvia Porter

SAVINGS BONDS PERK UP

Not in a long, long time have we been buying as many of the familiar U. S. "E" and "H" savings bonds as we are now.

For the first time in two and one-half years, monthly sales of new savings bonds are exceeding cash-ins of the outstanding securities. In January new sales hit $456 million, up 8 per cent from a year earlier, while cash-ins totaled $441 million, down 22 per cent and in February the trend has continued. For the whole of 1961, the Treasury's sales goal is $4.6 billion of new "E" and "H" bond sales, a rise of 7 per cent over last year, and the national director of the program, William H. Neal, expects redemptions will run 10 to 20 per cent below 1960.

The upswing in sales reflects the fact that Americans generally have been saving more recently--in financial institutions as well as savings bonds. To the extent that this mirrors the business downturn, the savings rise is a mixed blessing.

It also reflects the fact that, under a 1959 law, the Treasury raised the maximum rate on savings bonds from 3 1/4 to 3 3/4 per cent.

And the upswing reflects the fact that the program is now being promoted more intensively because 1961 marks its 20th birthday.

On May 1, it will be 20 years since the late President Roosevelt bought a little "E" bond from former Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, and by so doing set off the greatest volunteer savings drive in all history.

In the years since, close to $100 billion of Series "E" bonds have been sold and over two billion individual "E" bonds have been issued. Right now more than $43 billion of the "E" and "H" bonds are outstanding, an all-time peak total and representing 15 per cent of the public debt. Today 8,000,000 employees put an average of $20 a month in the bonds via payroll savings plans offered by 45,000 corporations.

This has been and is the world's most widely publicized thrift program. It has been and is the most spectacular securities medium for little investors ever devised.

But while the savings bond program obviously is still alive and our purchases help the Treasury manage the public debt in a sound way, does it still make sense for you to buy them? The "patriotic" appeal hasn't the pull it had in wartime. Critics rightfully point out that you must own a bond seven years and nine months to get the 3 3/4 per cent interest, and many financial institutions pay this and more in interest annually. Lots of banks and others grumble that in peacetime the savings bond unfairly competes with private institutions.

An honest answer to the question, I think, is: Yes--for a part of your basic nestegg--yes. After you've built your basic nestegg in cash or savings bonds, you should diversify and invest in other mediums. But at least a part of your savings well might be in bonds, because:

First, the discipline of saving via these bonds is unrivaled. When you buy under a payroll savings plan, the money is automatically deducted from your paycheck before you have a chance to fritter it away. And little weekly savings mount into big annual totals.

Second, the 3 3/4 per cent rate is fair for the long-term saver. Over the years ahead, it is unlikely that the average price level will rise by this amount per year. After you pay taxes on the interest, you won't have much net left, but you'll have some.

Third, the absolute safety of the bonds is a great virtue. You can't lose in dollars. You have peace of mind that will be worth a great deal in an emergency. You can cash in your bonds at any time.

It is fitting that the program should be perking up on its 20th anniversary. As a volunteer in the campaigns from the bond's birth, I am fully aware of its failings as well as its advantages, but even after this long period of familiarity I still think its virtues amply justify its place in the basic savings nestegg of American families.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

CONSIDER THE ORANGE

by Beryl Segal

Oranges, and citrus fruits in general, are a major part of the export of Israel. We who can buy a dozen of oranges at any time, in any market, think little of the orange and yellow balls piled up on the stalls of the fruit stores. But in England, Canada, Holland, Belgium, and other northern countries, where citrus plantations are not available, the orange is a great delicacy. England, for instance, buys 80% of the oranges and orange products made in Israel.

The Jerusalem Post, in an article named "Orange is Valuable from Peel to Pip," by Marja Wol-ska, tells of the industry and the ten products that are made of oranges in Israel. We say in Israel, because in no other country do they make so much of the citrus fruits.

First come the juices. These are pure citrus juices, with no additives and nothing subtracted from the fruit.

Then there are the concentrates. These are fruit juices boiled slowly, at very low temperatures, to remove the water.

These two products are the main articles of export.

Squash is a natural juice of citrus with sugar-syrup added. As high as 50% of syrup is added to this product.

The peel provides Essential Oils, Alcohols and Vinegars. The Essential oils extracted from the peel are used in making candy, beverages, and perfumes. The latter is exported mostly to France, the home of good perfumes. The oils are also used for lubricating very delicate instruments.

Animal fodder is provided by the peel and the pulp. These are chopped and dried and packaged after the oil is extracted. All of Israel's fodder for cows and chickens comes from this source.

Medicinal products are also provided by the oranges. There is a factory which manufactures Pectin. This is the ingredient in Kaopectate and other products used in diarrhea. There are other medicinal products made out of oranges, exported mainly to America.

Canned fruits, particularly grapefruit sections, are high on the export list. The Kibutzim, especially, are developing canning factories as a side industry.

There is also great activity going on in the frozen orange concentrate. This is entirely for export, and it will depend on the quality of the frozen product for the acceptance of the frozen orange from Israel. Israel does not consume much of the frozen oranges. They prefer the fresh product. And the freezer is not very common.

Then there is the light Beverage industry. This is entirely for local consumption. It consists of a small percentage of orange juice, and a very large quantity of water, sugar, and preservatives. Everybody drinks Mitz in hot Israel. This is made by very many, and very small factories. The quality of the beverage is under question, and there are many grades--the same as is common here. The higher priced beverages are better.

Marmalade is made of the orange peel, and it is served in every hotel and restaurant. Guests are always treated to cookies and marmalade.

"By the end of this list, there is absolutely nothing left of the orange," says the article.

All the citrus growers, private, Histadruth, and Kibbutzim, are all united in one large Citrus and Canned Products Assn. They compete locally, but are united for export purposes. The association processes the citrus fruits, and ships them to foreign markets.

The expected volume of the citrus fruit export for this year is four and a half million dollars.

The Lyons Den

BROADWAY GAZETTE

REALTY NOTE: The Harpo Marxes have four adopted children. It all started when one of their friends was unable to accept a child offered for adoption, and recommended the Marxes as foster parents. The infant soon brightened their lives. When, later, Harpo was asked how many more children he planned to adopt, he said: "As many as the number of windows in the front of my house. When I leave, each day, I want a child at every window waving goodbye to me."

ART DEPT.: Etruscan vases made news recently when the Metropolitan Museum of Art revealed that some of its Etruscan pieces were forgeries. Last week, in Rome, the forger signed a confession to having faked them. These, however, are not to be confused with another batch of Etruscan vases found by Mrs. Doris Warner Vidor in Rome three years ago. The dealer wanted $25 for each, and Mrs. Vidor had them sent to her hotel, on approval.

Her late husband, director Charles Vidor, rejected them, stating: "I don't want $25 vases. I want authentic old ones." Mrs. Vidor had sent many friends to that shop, and they all bought Etruscan vases for $25 each. Any doubts about the authenticity of the vases disappeared when the dealer was indicted for looting ancient Roman graves.

FINANCE NOTE: Bruno Pagli, now married to Merle Oberon, went to the Casino at Monte Carlo with Jack Warner. They formed a partnership for the evening and won much money. When they cashed in their chips, Warner took his winnings in large-denomination currency. Pagli, however, insisted that he wanted 100-franc notes and the pile wrapped into a huge package--to show to his wife, who

The label of the association is very distinctive. "JaffaGold" they call their products, and the label is becoming a familiar sight on the shelves of foreign food markets.

Beside the giant Citrus and Canned Product Association, there are many smaller, independent companies.

Assis, in particular, is an important citrus fruit factory. It was established in 1929, and was the first to engage in canning local citrus fruits. Last year, the export of Assis, which in Hebrew means Juice, was about two million dollars. The company employs 400 people.

The industry was greatly helped by the hotels springing up in Israel. The American tourists demand and get fresh orange juice. The demand is greater than the supply.

And the Honey industry is, in turn, helped by the orange plantations. The bees, turned loose in an orange grove, produce a pale-green orange blossom honey, which is a delight to the eye and sweet to the palate.

(Mr. Segal's opinions are his own. His views are not necessarily those of this newspaper.)

BRIDGE NOTE: Douglas Furber, the songwriter, who died recently, wrote "Limehouse Blues," "The Lambeth Walk" and "The Bells of St. Mary's." He was a member of the Savage Club in London. One day James Agate, the critic, drew Furber as his partner in a bridge game and announced: "I've drawn a terrible partner." At the first hand Furber, still fuming at Agate's comment, bid seven no trump, doubled and redoubled. He made only three tricks. Then he said to the critic, his partner in this heavy loss: "Mr. Agate, when you said, in drawing me, that you had drawn a terrible partner, you were justified in that statement, but not at the time you made it."
TRAVEL NOTE: Jack E. Leonard lunched with a friend at the Fundador, before boarding a train to Washington. Because train reservations were scarce, due to the airline strike, Leonard tried to hurry his friend, who dawdled and said: "Don't worry. We'll make the train. The trouble with you is you're insecure"...They missed the train. Leonard glared at his tardy friend, who shrugged: "I guess it's the engineer who was really insecure."
OPERA NOTE: At the technical rehearsal of "Turandot" at the Met, Cecil Beaton, who designed the costumes, heard two members of the company complain that their costumes were dangerous. Beaton rushed from his seat to investigate. It was the beads, the long beads dangling from their foreheads, they told him. The beads hit their eyes and endangered their contact lenses. Beaton met this new challenge to opera costuming. He trimmed the long beads.

MUSIC NOTE: In 1938 the songs of Sholom Secunda were burned and banned in Nazi Germany. Last week a TV film crew from Germany photographed the songwriter, in a film to be shown to 20,000,000 viewers there. They also photographed him at the Coney Island Boardwalk, where he conceived his most popular song, "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen."
THEATER NOTE: Carol Channing brought Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne to meet George Burns and Gracie Allen. When they arrived at the Burns' home, Lunt began to recite, as the door opened, a routine Gracie had used 30 years ago: "I'm glad I'm dizzy. Boys like dizzy girls, and I like boys."
 If ever Gracie emerges from her retirement, it will be for a routine conceived by her husband. Burns hopes someday to produce a two-couple bit, with Miss Fontanne playing Gracie's role opposite him, and Gracie doing a dramatic scene with Lunt. "Gracie is not a funny girl," Burns said. "She's a great actress. A comedienne could never do that role and get the laughs she does. Only an actress can."

 Burns has a telegram from the late showman, C. B. Dillingham, who saw them in vaudeville and wanted them for the European production of "Show Boat." Dillingham wired his terms: "For the girl $750, for the team $500."

Antipodean Bidding

"The Australian One-Club System," by William Noall (Angus and Robertson) describes a system based on a conventional 1C opening bid and the losing-trick count. In addition, it has rigid requirements for an opening bid or immediate response. For example, four-card suits are not biddable unless they contain two of the three top honors. This system may work well for slam bidding but it is too inflexible for most ordinary hands. However, enthusiasts whose interests may have been aroused by the success of the world champion Italian team with the 1C system may like to consider this simpler Australian version.

The following example is interesting, both for its bidding and for its play:

Dealer South; neither side vulnerable:

North
 ♠—A K 6
 ♥—A K 8 6 3
 ♦—5
 ♣—K 8 6 2

West East
 ♠—Q 10 7 5 3 2 ♠—J 9 4
 ♥—Q J 10 ♥—9 7 5
 ♦—K 10 3 ♦—Q 8 7
 ♣—9 ♣—J 10 7 3

South
 ♠—8
 ♦—A J 9 6 4 2
 ♣—A Q 5 4

The bidding went:
 South West North East
 2D (a) Pass 2S (b) Pass
 3C (c) Pass 3H (d) Pass
 4D (e) Pass 6C Pass
 Pass Pass

(a) Ten cards in two biddable suits, two quick tricks, and not more than six losing tricks.

(b) Two of the essential cards — spade ace and another ace.

(c) Second biddable suit.

(d) Biddable heart suit.

(e) Shows that the diamond suit is longer than the club suit.

The opening lead was the five of spades, which knocked out one of the entry cards for the heart suit. On such a freak hand it is unlikely that all the suits will break favorably and the right course now is to try the heart suit first. When declarer has made A, K of hearts and a ruff he can also count on two tricks and a ruff in spades and the ace of diamonds, making seven tricks in all. If declarer can then make two diamond ruffs in dummy with the small trumps, he is assured of twelve tricks by making his A, K, Q of clubs separately, and therefore does not rely on a trump break. This play, which is admittedly a little double-dummy, is in fact the only way to make the contract after the spade lead. You require West to have three or four hearts and East to have not less than three diamonds.

I can recommend this book, which contains many interesting hands, to serious students of bridge.

$2 MILLION TO JDC

CHICAGO — Maxwell Kunin, a Chicago Jewish philanthropist and realtor, who died in 1959 at the age of 59, bequeathed 25% of his $8,900,000 estate to the Joint Distribution Committee, according to a will filed in probate court, it was reported here recently.

Leroy Krein, his lawyer, said that the JDC will receive $250,000 under the inventory filed last week. He added that the money is to be spent "solely for relief of needy immigrants to Israel." Mrs. Kunin told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency that her husband, who was born in Philadelphia, took a great interest in Jewish charitable institutions and was a member of two congregations, Reform and Orthodox.

TO ALLOW HANGING
JERUSALEM — An amendment to the Israel court proceedings law, providing special arrangements for the trial of Adolf Eichmann, passed its third and final reading last week in the Knesset, Israel's Parliament by a vote of 39-16, and became law.
During the third reading, a clause was added reviving the special British Mandatory law providing for implementation of death sentences by hanging. Capital punishment was abolished when Israel was proclaimed, except for wartime treason and nazi crimes. However, there has been no death sentence passed since Israel was created and there was, therefore, no provision in Israeli law for implementation of such a sentence, even for exceptional cases.
Another clause in the amendment provide that district courts trying capital offenses must be headed by a Supreme Court judge.

in a hump

THE HUMP ON THE CAMEL'S BACK may look strange, but it serves a practical purpose. On the desert, the camel must go without food and water for long periods of time. But he is able to store nourishment in his hump sufficient to tide himself over the lean days that might lie ahead.

There are apt to be lean days for everyone. Life insurance can help tide you over many of these for it provides cash at times of greatest need. A Sun Life insurance program, for example, can safeguard your widow's independence, your children's education, your home and your retirement years. Let me tell you how.
