Basketball finds international appeal at Bryant

International basketball fans gathered at Bryant University for the first time last night as the school's basketball team played its first game since returning from a hiatus. The team, which had been dormant for several years, was reformed and is now competing in the Northeast Conference. The game, held in the school's gymnasium, drew a large crowd of spectators, many of whom were international students and faculty members. The team's performance was impressive, and the game was a success for the school and its basketball program.

The game was a significant event for Bryant University, as it marked the return of a popular sport to the campus. The team's success in its first game was a testament to the hard work and dedication of the players and coaches. The game also provided an opportunity for international students to experience American basketball culture and to interact with their American counterparts. The school's administration and faculty members were supportive of the team's efforts, and the game was a great success for everyone involved.

Expanding Purim in our classrooms

Purim is a Jewish holiday that commemorates the saving of the Jewish people from a plot to annihilate them in the Persian Empire. The story is told in the Book of Esther, which is one of the most dramatic and colorful stories in the Bible. Purim is celebrated with a variety of customs, including the reading of the Megillah (the Book of Esther), the throwing of lots to determine the date of the festival, and the eating of Hamantaschen (Hamantaschen are small, triangular-shaped pastries that are traditionally eaten during Purim).

At the University of Alabama, we have a rich and diverse student body, and it is important for us to celebrate and learn about the traditions of all our students. Purim is a wonderful opportunity for us to come together and share our stories and traditions. We are excited to announce that we will be celebrating Purim on campus this year, and we invite all our students to join us in this special celebration.

The celebration will include a variety of activities, including a Purim parade, a Hamantaschen eating contest, and a reading of the Megillah. We will also have a special service at the synagogue, where we will read the Megillah and pray for the well-being of our community. We hope that this celebration will be a fun and meaningful experience for all our students, and we look forward to seeing you there.

Parents get better news

Parents of children with autism spectrum disorders are getting better news. A new study from the University of Wisconsin-Madison shows that early diagnosis and intervention can lead to significant improvements in children's language and social skills. The research, published in the journal Journal of Autism and Developmental Disorders, found that children who were diagnosed and started on therapy before the age of 3 showed much greater gains in IQ and communication skills compared to those who were diagnosed later.

The study, led by researchers at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, involved a group of 22 children with autism spectrum disorders. The children were divided into two groups: one group was diagnosed and started on therapy before the age of 3, while the other group was diagnosed and started on therapy after the age of 3. The researchers found that the children in the early diagnosis group showed significantly greater improvements in language and social skills compared to the children in the late diagnosis group.

RECENT ADVANCES IN THERAPEUTICS

The first of these is the use of the sulfonamide drugs, which have revolutionized the treatment of bacterial infections. These drugs, which are synthetic in origin, have a broad spectrum of activity and are effective against a wide variety of organisms. They are particularly useful in the treatment of meningitis, pneumonia, and urinary tract infections. The second advance is the use of the penicillins, which are natural products of a mold. Penicillin is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive organisms and has been particularly successful in the treatment of streptococcal infections, syphilis, and meningitis. The third advance is the use of the streptomycin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Streptomycin is effective against a wide variety of gram-negative organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of tuberculosis and meningitis.

The fourth advance is the use of the tetracyclines, which are natural products of a bacterium. Tetracyclines are effective against a wide variety of gram-positive and gram-negative organisms and have been particularly useful in the treatment of pneumonia, meningitis, and urinary tract infections. The fifth advance is the use of the chloramphenicol, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Chloramphenicol is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive and gram-negative organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of meningitis, pneumonia, and urinary tract infections.

The sixth advance is the use of the erythromycin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Erythromycin is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of pneumonia, meningitis, and urinary tract infections. The seventh advance is the use of the bacitracin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Bacitracin is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of pneumonia, meningitis, and urinary tract infections.

The eighth advance is the use of the vancomycin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Vancomycin is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of pneumonia, meningitis, and urinary tract infections. The ninth advance is the use of the teicoplanin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Teicoplanin is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of pneumonia, meningitis, and urinary tract infections.

The tenth advance is the use of the rifampin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. Rifampin is effective against a wide variety of gram-positive organisms and has been particularly useful in the treatment of pneumonia, meningitis, and urinary tract infections. The eleventh advance is the use of the cloxacillin, which is a natural product of a bacterium. ### THE NEW YORK STATE BOARD OF HEALTH RECOMMENDS THE USE OF SULFONAMIDES IN THE TREATMENT OF BACTERIAL INFECTIONS

The New York State Board of Health has issued a report recommending the use of sulfonamide drugs in the treatment of bacterial infections. The report is based on a study of the effectiveness of these drugs in the treatment of various bacterial infections. The study found that sulfonamide drugs are highly effective in the treatment of meningitis, pneumonia, and urinary tract infections. The Board of Health has therefore recommended the use of these drugs in the treatment of these infections. The report also recommends the use of sulfonamide drugs in the treatment of other bacterial infections, such as streptococcal infections, syphilis, and tuberculosis.

The Board of Health also recommends the use of sulfonamide drugs in the treatment of other bacterial infections, such as streptococcal infections, syphilis, and tuberculosis.
