According to Norman M. Fain, chairman of the Building Committee, contracts have been awarded and were signed last Wednesday with the E. Turgeon Construction Co., Inc. for the general construction of the Temple, Religious School and social hall. The heating installations will be made by Joseph P. Cuddigan, plumbing by Max Fish and electrical work by Coken Co.

Franks, Dr. Julius Irving, Prof. Samuel Lerner, Maurice Moskol, Meyer Tenenbaum, and A. Henry Klein and Samuel Kaplan, ex-officio.

Last year a building committee was elected to supervise the planning and construction of the new buildings. This committee met regularly under the chairmanship of Fain. ### Dinner, Reception To Precede Meeting

Arrangements for the visit to Providence of Abba Eban, Israel's Ambassador to the United States, on Monday, June 30 were completed this week with the announcement that Joey Adams, radio and night club performer, will entertain at the rally to be held that evening at the Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel. Eban will be guest of honor and principal speaker at the affair. The program will start at 8:30 P. M., and is open to the public without charge.

Widely known as the quizmaster of the network radio show "Rate Your Mate", Adams returned recently from Israel where he was received by President Chaim Weizmann in recognition of the comedian's sale of $1,000,000 in State of Israel Bonds in the United States.

Adams has been an entertainer since his boyhood in Brooklyn, and made his way up through the Borscht Circuit to top night clubs and theatres throughout the country. He has been featured at such famous clubs as the Latin Quarter, Copacabana, and Beachcomber.

Not content with confining his talents to the entertainment field, Adams invaded the literary scene with his autobiography, "From Gags to Riches." The success of the volume made the Damon Runyon Memorial Fund richer by $165,000, the royalties which Adams turned over to the cancer research organization.

Albert A. Levin, attorney and community leader from Cleveland, Ohio, will also be a guest speaker at the rally. Levin is president of the Cleveland Zionist District and serves as a member of the Board of Governors of the Israel Bond Issue.

A graduate of the Law School of Ohio State University, where he was one of the founders of the Legal Aid Society and the Ohio State Law Bulletin, Levin organized the Bureau of Investigation of the State of Ohio.

Argentina Admits Nazi General

WASHINGTON—Dr. Walter P. Schreiber, former Nazi general whose employment in this country by the United States Air Force evoked nation-wide protest, has been admitted into Argentina, the Air Force revealed.

In a letter to Rep. Jacob K. Javits, Brig. Gen. Robert E. L. Eaton, director of Air Force Legislation and Liaison Service, said that Schreiber had left the United States on May 22 for the Argentine. "He did not express an intention of returning to this country and is not expected to do so. Should Dr. Schreiber at some future time apply for permission to re-enter the United States, the matter would be one for other government agencies to decide. The Air Force would not sponsor or otherwise assist him."

MERCY KILLER GETS YEAR

TEL AVIV—A prison term of one year was imposed here on Gerda Weinstein, 29-year-old mother who confessed drowning her incurable deaf and mute son aged 5.

On imposing sentence, the District Court judge noted that his leniency of sentence was motivated by the fact that there are no institutions in Israel for the care of such handicapped children.

Dr. Grundfest Denied Passport to Israel

WASHINGTON—The State Department confirmed the report that it had denied an American passport to Dr. Harry Grundfest, chairman of the American Medical Advisory Board to Hebrew University and the Hadassah Medical School, for travel to Israel.

The Department said it denied Dr. Grundfest a passport because his travel "would not be in the best interests of the United States."

Dr. Grundfest is a member of the faculty of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University. In 1945 he urged defeat of a bill to impose strict secrecy on the subject of atomic energy and opposed use of atomic bombs in any future war.

Establish Grossman Memorial Fund

A group of friends and admirers of the late Dr. Herman D. Grossman met recently at the home of Morton Smith, 65 Hazard Avenue, to discuss ways and means for the establishment of a fund to create a library, and a room in which the library would be housed, in the Miriam Hospital in honor of Dr. Grossman.

Dr. Grossman, who died June 5, was chief surgeon of the ophthalmic department of Miriam Hospital. He had long cherished a desire to establish a medical library at the hospital.

The group voted that if sufficient funds were collected, books meant for the layman would be added to the technical collection.

The following officers were elected: Judah Semonoff, chairman; Smith, treasurer, and Dr. Nathan Bolotow, secretary. The board of directors includes the officers as well as Louis Fain, Milton Kay, Dr. David Fish, Dr. Nathan Chaset and Dr. William Fain.

There will be no appeals and no solicitation of funds other than by letters mailed out giving the full purpose of the fund, Semonoff said.

At a meeting of the board held Tuesday, it was voted to incorporate as a non-business corporation under the name "Dr. Herman D. Grossman Memorial Fund." Contributors will thus be allowed to count their gifts as tax-deductible.

Contributions should be sent to Morton Smith, treasurer, 100 Medway Street, Providence.

Lederer, Mrs. Samuel Markoff, Dr. Walter J. Nelson, Albert Pilavin, Mrs. Howard Presel and Martin M. Silverstein, vice-chairmen; Alvin A. Sopkin, treasurer; Benjamin F. Ruttenberg, assistant treasurer; Milton Pliner, secretary; Kenneth Logowitz, assistant secretary; and Jules P. Goldsmith, publicity chairman, in addition to a large committee of Temple members.

Alphonse J. Lederer and John Jacob Rosenfeld bequeathed substantial sums towards the construction of the new Temple Beth El.

Ninety-nine years have passed since Congregation Sons of Israel and David—Temple Beth El—was founded, as one of the earliest of the nation's Reform Jewish Congregations. Having already occupied three different houses of worship as the size of the congregation increased, it has become obvious in recent years that a larger, more adequate, modern Temple was needed.

The public is invited to participate in the ground breaking ceremonies.

Camp Centerland Opens On Monday

More than 200 boys and girls will inaugurate the fifth season of Camp Centerland on Monday, as the Jewish Community Center's summer day-camp in Hope, R. I. along the banks of the Pawtuxet River, entertains the several busloads of children from all parts of Providence, Pawtucket and Cranston.

The campers, who represent a capacity registration at Camp Centerland, will be transported daily by buses which will pick them up in their own neighborhoods in the morning and return them to the same spots late in the afternoon. The camp day will last until 4 P. M. daily, five days a week.

Open to youngsters between the ages of 6 and 13, Camp Centerland, in a country location 14 miles from Providence, provides 25 acres of recreational area, including a newly lengthened and improved beach front and two large structures—an administration building and a recreational building.

A large, well-trained staff of counsellors conducts and supervises the varied program of activi-

Hebrew Academy Elects Mincoff

The following were elected to the board of directors: Mrs. H. B. Stone, Mrs. Joseph J. Sindle, Benjamin Cohen, Eugene Cornfield, Benjamin Fox, Jack Glantz, George Labush, Max J. Richter, Harry Stairman, Hyman B. Stone, Daniel Sweet, Maurice W. Winograd, David Weintraub and Getzel Zaidman.

ties that is presented at Centerland.

The full camp season will be from June 30 to August 22. Many children, however, are enrolled for either of the two divided periods of four weeks each, from June 30 to July 25, and from July 28 until the camp's closing date.

Milton C. Kay, chairman of the Center camping committee, announced the formation of a committee headed by Lawrence Paley, "to consider a long range plan for the development and provision of such facilities as are needed to render even greater service than is now possible at Camp Centerland."

Among the new facilities to be considered are construction of an athletic field and a complete athletic area, and additional structures at the waterfront, providing toilets and dressing quarters.

Kay revealed that provisions have been made for approximately 50-60 children to receive camperships for the 1952 camping season. These children, he said, otherwise might not get the opportunity to go to camp this summer.

There will be no letdown of planning activity during the summer at the Jewish Community Center, according to various organization officials.

The Men's Association, following its meeting this week, will hold several committee meetings in preparation for its first complete season in the fall. ## Plan Yiddish Film Series for Oldsters

The new series of programs for Older Adults, sponsored jointly by the Council of Jewish Women and the Jewish Community Center, will be resumed with regular weekly programs at the Center in the fall. Jacob J. Alprin, chairman of the Center's Older Adults Activities committee, reported this week.

Alprin added that a series of Yiddish films will be shown for older adults during the summer months of July and August. "We hope that a large number of older adults who are remaining in the city during the summer will attend these film programs and help us discuss plans for their fall meetings," Alprin said.

The films will be shown at the North End and South Providence, to facilitate travelling. Dates, locations and names of films will be announced later. Three will be shown in each section.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Jack Davis, chairman of the Council's older adults committee, said that the Council may organize a motor squad to bring older adults to the Center when the fall program gets under way provided sufficient persons sign up for this service at the film programs.

"Private Lives" at Theatre-By-The-Sea

The second production of the current season at the Theatre-By-The-Sea, Matunuck, R. I., stars Alexis Smith and Victor Jory in Noel Coward's swift, turbulent, and light footed comedy, "Private Lives". The play first opened on Broadway in 1931 with Noel Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in the starring roles. A howling success, the comedy ran for 256 performances and listed among the supporting players a young actor named Laurence Olivier. Seventeen years later, Tallulah Bankhead revived the rowdy romp and it was even more of a success than the original.

"Private Lives" is a unique comedy, both sophisticated and roughhouse. With bright, crisp, dialogue and bone-breaking action, it tells the story of a divorced couple who meet on adjoining hotel terraces on the Riviera where they are honeymooning with their new spouses. They are a couple who explode violently when brought into contact with each other, but too deeply in love to stand being apart.

"Private Lives" with Alexis Smith and Victor Jory opens Monday evening and remains through Saturday night, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

The Herald's deadline for next week is Monday, 5 P. M. We cannot guarantee to insert stories received after that time.

If Not Higher

By YITZCHOK L. PERETZ

Editor's Note: This year marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Yitzchok L. Peretz, the great Yiddish writer whose stories are as enchanting in English translation as they are in the original Yiddish. Born in Zapasz, Poland, Peretz became one of the outstanding figures in Yiddish literature, ranking on a par with Sholem Aleichem, Mendele Mocher Seferim and the masters who followed them. Many of Peretz's stories and poems have been translated into English. His "If Not Higher," which we are pleased to present here as an AJP feature, is among his most famous stories. Peretz died in Warsaw in 1915. Death occurred at his desk after he had written the second line of a children's song which he had intended to compose for the World War I children's refugee homes.

Every Friday morning, the Rebbe of Namirov disappeared early at Sliches-time. He melted into thin air! He was not to be found anywhere, either in the synagogue or in the two houses of study, or worshipping in some Minyan, and most certainly not at home. His door stood open, people went in and out as they pleased—no one ever stole anything from the Rebbe—but there was not a soul in the house.

Where can the Rebbe be? Where should he be, with the Solemn Days so near, if not in heaven? Jews need a livelihood, peace, health; they wish to be good and pious, and their sins are great, and Satan with his thousand eyes spies out the world from one end to the other, and he sees, and accuses, and tells tales—and who shall help if not the Rebbe? So thought the people.

Once, however, there came a Lithuanian—and he laughed. You know the Lithuanian Jews—they rather despise books of devotion, but stuff themselves with the Talmud and the codes. And who, I ask, is going to argue with a Litvak?

What becomes of the Rebbe? "I don't know, and I don't care," says he, shrugging his shoulders, and all the while (what is it to be a Lithuanian?) determined to find out!

The very same evening, soon after prayers, the Lithuanian steals into the Rebbe's room, lays himself down under the Rebbe's bed and lies low. He intends to stay there all night to find out where the Rebbe goes, and what he does at Sliches-time.

Day has not broken when he hears the call to prayer. The Rebbe has been awake sometime. The Lithuanian has heard him sighing and groaning for a whole hour. Whoever has heard the groaning of the Nemirov Rebbe knows what sorrow for All-Israel, what distress of mind, found voice in every groan.

After that the Lithuanian hears the people rise and leave the house. Once more it is quiet and dark, only a very little moonlight comes in through the shutter. He confessed afterwards, did the Lithuanian, that when he found himself alone with the Rebbe, terror took hold of him. But a Lithuanian is dogged. He quivers and quakes like a fish, but he does not budge. At last the Rebbe (long life to him!) rises in his turn. He goes to the wardrobe, and takes out a packet which proves to be the dress of a peasant: linen trousers, high boots, a pelisse, a wide felt hat, and a long and broad leather belt studded with brass nails. The Rebbe puts them on.

Out of the pockets of the pelisse dangles the end of a thick cord, a peasant's cord.

On his way out the Rebbe steps aside into the kitchen, stoops, takes a hatchet from under the bed, puts it into his belt, and leaves the house. The Lithuanian trembles, but he persists.

A fearful Solemn Day hush broods over the dark streets, broken not unfrequently by a cry of supplication from some little Minyan, or the moan of some sick person behind a window. The Rebbe keeps to the street side, and walks in the shadow of the houses. He glides from one to the other, the Lithuanian after him. And the Lithuanian hears the sound of his own heart-beats mingle with the heavy footfall of the Rebbe; but he follows on, and together they emerge from the town.

Behind the town stands a little wood. The Rebbe (long life to him!) enters it. He walks on thirty or forty paces, and then he stops beside a small tree. And the Lithuanian, with amazement, sees the Rebbe take his hatchet and strike the tree. He sees the Rebbe strike blow after blow, he hears the tree creak and snap. And the little tree falls, and the Rebbe splits it up into logs, and the logs into splinters. Then he makes a bundle, binds it round with the cord, throws it on his shoulders, replaces the hatchet in his belt, leaves the wood, and goes back into the town.

In one of the back streets he stops beside a poor, tumble-down little house, and taps at the window.

"Who is there?" cries a frightened voice within.

The Lithuanian knows it to be the voice of a Jewess, a sick Jewess. "I," answers the Rebbe, in the peasant tongue.

"Who is I?" inquires the voice, farther.

And the Rebbe answers again in the Little-Russian speech: "Vas-over, then Jews, instead of being doomed, will be held up as an example. Who knows, it might even be our religion from which the world and all peoples learn good, and for that reason and that reason only do we have to suffer now. We can never become just Netherlands, or just English, or representatives of any country for that matter, we will always remain Jews, but we want to, too.

"Be brave! Let us remain aware of our task and not grumble, a solution will come, God has never deserted our people. Right through the ages there have been Jews, through all the ages they have had to suffer, but it has made them strong too; the weak fall, but the strong will remain and never go under!"

There is a love story. Anne and the Van Daans' son Peter fell deeply in love. They confided in one another. At one point—youth is not afraid of truth—Anne tells Peter about a woman's physical make-up. There are other confidences. But this is the Gemut of this most remarkable book: its confidences that are mixed with sincerity brilliantly recorded.

"Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl" will be viewed as a very great book long after many best sellers are forgotten.

sil." "Which Vassil? and what do you want, Vassil?"

"I have wood to sell," says the sham peasant, "very cheap, for next to nothing." And without further ado he goes in. The Lithuanian steals in behind him and sees, in the grey light of dawn, a poor room with poor, broken furniture. In the bed lies a sick Jewess huddled up in rags, who says bitterly:

"Wood to sell—and where am I, a poor widow, to get money to buy it?"

"I will give you a six-groschen worth on credit."

"And how am I ever to repay you?" groans the poor woman.

"Foolish creature," the Rebbe upbraids her. "See here: you are a poor sick Jewess, and I am willing to trust you with the little bundle of wood; I believe that in time you will repay me. And you, you have such a great mighty God, and you do not trust Him! Not even to the amount of a miserable six groschen for a bundle of wood!"

"And who is to light the stove?" groans the widow. "Do I look like getting up to do it, and my son away at work?"

"I will also light the stove for you," said the Rebbe. And the Rebbe, while he laid the wood in the stove, repeated, groaning, the first part of the Sliches. Then, when the stove was alight, and the wood crackled cheerily, he repeated, more gaily, the second part of the Sliches. He repeated the third part when the first had burnt itself out, and he shut the stove doors.

The Lithuanian, who saw all this, remained with the Rebbe as one of his followers.

And, later, when anyone told how the Rebbe early every morning at Sliches-time raised himself and flew up into Heaven, the Lithuanian instead of laughing, added quietly:

"If not higher."

Cantor Josef S. Lengyel of Woonsocket, director of the recently organized Jewish Choral Society, was introduced at the second meeting of the group on June 12 at the Jewish Community Center.

Cantor Lengyel began his operatic career in Germany in 1925, becoming a leading tenor of the Berlin Municipal Opera Company. He came to the United States in 1936 and was appointed head of the Opera and Voice Department at the Birmingham Conservatory of Music.

The Society hopes to produce a Jewish operetta next spring. Solo parts and choral ensemble parts are available. The program for the coming year includes courses in sight-reading and ear-training, Jewish folk songs and Palestinian music.

Girl's 'Document of Adolescence'—Most Remarkable Book of Our Time

Reporters and reviewers have learned to exercise restraint in using descriptive words like "extraordinary" and "remarkable." It is too easy to go to extremes through careless misuse of these terms. But a teen-ager has emerged posthumously so remarkable in her description of what happened to her and her family under Nazi rule in Holland, that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt used before the liberation of Holland. In March 1945, Anne died in the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp. Of the eight who were in hiding for more than two years, only Anne's father survived death at the hands of the Nazis.

Anne's diary was found among the rubbish in the house in which she was hidden, after the war. It was published in Dutch in 1947 under the title "Het Achterhuis," referring to the part of the building in which the group was hiding. In the English translation by B. M. Mooyart-Doubleday, it is called "Secret Annex." A photograph of the abandoned building in which Anne wrote her diary is reproduced here, together with the photograph of Anne which also was found with her diary.

"The young are not afraid of telling the truth," Mrs. Roosevelt states in her commendation of this "remarkable book." Full realization of the truth of this statement comes with a reading of Anne's story. Only the calloused will be able to put the book down for too long a time without reading on and on until the book is finished; and the emotion that accompanies the reading of this great book will leave few eyes dry.

The amazing thing about the book is that it is not all sad, that this youngster had a feeling for humor that stemmed from her keen sense of observation.

On May 3, 1944, she recorded interesting reactions to what was happening to her, her family, her fellow-sufferers, the world. They were in grave danger, they were herded together, often in fear of a raid, using one pottle in a single room until the threat from the outside disappeared. Under such circumstances she defied despair, thus:

"I don't believe that the big men, the politicians and the capitalists alone, are guilty of the war. Oh no, the little man is just as guilty, otherwise the peoples of the world would have risen in revolt long ago! There's in people simply an urge to destroy, an urge to kill, to murder and rape, and until all mankind, without exception, undergoes a great change, wars will be waged, everything that has been built up, cultivated, and grown will be destroyed and disfigured, after which mankind will have to begin all over again.

"I have often been downcast, but never in despair; I regard our hiding as a dangerous adventure, romantic and interesting at the same time. In my diary I treat all the privations as amusing. I have made up my mind now to lead a different life from other girls and, later on, different from ordinary housewives. My start has been so very full of interest, and that is the sole reason why I have to the word in her commendation. And the publishers call the book "an extraordinary document of adolescence."

After reading "Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl," the reviewer unhesitatingly uses both terms. Nothing like it has appeared in print in our time. It is the product of a girl who emerges brilliant as a writer, wise as an observer, who sought some one to confide in and chose a diary. It begins on June 14, 1942, when Anne Frank and her family and the Van Daans went into hiding in an old office building in Amsterdam. The last recorded entry in the diary, before the eight people who were hidden for more than two years were discovered by the Gestapo, who raided their home, was on Aug. 1, 1944. Two months

Camp Jori Begins 1952 Season; Establishes Three Week Periods

The 1952 Camp Jori season which begins today will be a banner one, according to Max Kestenman, President of the sponsoring organization, The Jewish Children's Home and Foundation of Rhode Island. "Despite an increase in camp capacity from eighty to ninety children, we still have a large waiting list," Mr. Kestenman stated.

There have been several changes in the camp set-up since last season. A Quonset Hut has been set up to serve as an indoor assembly hall, arts and crafts area, and sleeping quarters for kitchen personnel.

A three day counselor work shop was established in cooperation with the Jewish Welfare Board, and conducted prior to the opening of camp this week.

Mr. Kestenman stated that the workshops were intended to stimulate the project method which is ideal for camp settings since it allows for joint camp counselor participation. The theme of the special projects will be dovetailed to dramatize Jewish holidays and historical events.

After considerable study by the Board, the camp will be placed on a three week basis this year for the first time. Previously children were enrolled on a two week basis. A new swim area, Sand Hill Cove, which is located at Pt. Judith, has been designated for beach use this year. Although the camp fee is set at $50 for the three week period, provisions were made for camperships, Registration, as in the past, has been carried out by the staff of the Jewish Family and Children's Service.

Kestenman stated, "The Foundation maintains Jori as a community camp and it is open to all children. Naturally, it is the intent of the Foundation to reserve camperships for those who are in need of them. Otherwise, there is no limitation as to enrollment."

Nathan E. Sklar was re-appointed as Camp Administrator and Leo Weiss will be Camp Director for his fifth year.

SUNDAY'S SCHEDULE

Technoprint vs Cranston at Richardson Park; Waldorf vs Broadway Auto at Hopkins Park; M & F Insurance vs Natcor at Roger Williams Park.

Behind the four hit shutout pitching of Ralph Winn, Technoprint took the first game 11-0. George Karembelas and Lou Dosoglos were the hitting leaders, the former with two home runs among his three hits, the latter slamming a homer, triple and single. It was a scoreless game for three innings, until the barrage of homers put the game out of reach. Karembelas was the fielding star.

In the second game, Natcor jumped off to a 2-run first inning lead on a homer by Ernie Chernack. Wildness by Natcor starter Berstein led to a big 9-run third inning for Technoprint and the ball game. Phil Levine had three hits and Pitcher Levene helped his own cause with two hits. David also pitched a steady game after the shaky first inning.

The Cincinnati Reds, who last week added Brooklyn outfielder Cal Abrams to the roster, have listed Cal as the fourth Jewish player who has played for the Rhinelanders. Preceding Abrams were Morrie Aronovitch, slugging outfielder; Phil Weintraub, fancy first baseman; and Sammy Bohne (real name Cohen), an infielder.

Despite all the publicity that George Kell has received, there is another third baseman in the American League who is highly regarded in baseball circles. That one would be the Senators' Eddie Yost, a terrific glove man and the finest lead-off man in the league. Yost annually rivalled Ted Williams for the base on balls championship. He always goes over 100.

Anyway, when the famous Detroit-Boston trade was pulled off last month, George Kell was said to have been the big man in the deal. Maybe so; yet Joe Cronin, Red Sox' general manager, has not denied that he held up the deal until he contacted Washington to make a final try to get Yost from the Nats.

Would that seem to indicate whom the Sox consider to be the better third sacker?

The recent appointment of Marty Marion as manager of the Browns is a reminder that the playing manager, once thought to be as extinct as the dodo bird, is still kicking—but good. In the National League, Phil Cavaretta is holding forth with the Cubs and Eddie Stanky has the Cardinals following his scrappy lead. Besides Marion in the American League, there is Lou Boudreau of the Red Sox. Lou hasn't played yet, but he is on the active list and says he is staying in shape in case he is needed.

Four playing managers in the majors! That hasn't happened in a long time.

Boudreau, of course, player-managered the Indians for several years, and Joe Cronin was field boss of the Senators and Red Sox for some 15 years. Back in the middle 30's Mickey Cochrane did a great job leading the Tigers from his catching position. And then there was Leo Durocher with the Dodgers.

But you have to go back to 1934 to find a period when player-managers were so much in vogue. The Red Sox were managed that year by Marty McManus, a second baseman, while Cronin held the reins at Washington. Cochrane at Detroit and Jimmy Dykes at Chicago rounded out the American League contingent.

The National League also had some pretty fair operatives. Bill Terry of the Giants and Charley Grimm of the Cubs were pretty fair competitors at first base and there were no flies on Frankie Frisch of the Cards. Frankie was a second sacker, Jimmie Wilson handled the Phils from behind the plate.

Eight out of sixteen—all at the same time! That was a record.

Some of these boys did quite well, too. Cronin won a pennant in 1933, Cochrane won a pennant in 1934 and a World Championship in '35; Grimm had pennant winners in 1932 and '35, Terry won the World title in 1933, and Frisch turned that trick in 1934. Cronin also won with the Red Sox in 1945. Terry's team was tops in 1936 and 1937.

The resurgence in the player-manager ranks calls attention to a natural reluctance on the part of the owners to name a player to run a ball club. In most circles it is felt that a player who has lived with and been a pal to the other boys cannot exert the discipline necessary to handle a team.

When the Giants achieved most of their early century fame, John McGraw, a stern taskmaster from the bench, was at the helm. The most successful team of all time, the Yankees, had Miller Huggins, imported from the Cardinals, at the head of their notorious Murderers Row. Joe McCarthy, brought in from the National League, was a stern disciplinarian. He won seven pennants in eight years. The fabulous Casey Stengel was a stranger to the Yanks until 1949. These three bench-men are among the most successful pilots of all time.

Yet, there is no denying that the player-managers mentioned earlier won their fair share of pennants and seemed to have the respect of their teams. Can that be explained? Sure.

Most of these men were spark plugs, the kind of inspirational leaders who pulled their clubs along by their own superb efforts. Joe Cronin was a nifty short-stop and a ruinous hitter.

Who can forget the fiery Mickey Cochrane setting his Tigers ablaze with his marvelous play and leadership? Two pennants in his first two years is his record. Yet, when injuries forced him to the bench, Black Mike was not the same man. He was no good unless he was personally leading the battle.

Another fine catcher, Bill Dickey, made the mistake of removing himself to the bench when he took over the reins of his club, and he failed miserably, and was out of power in less than a season.

Frankie Frisch inspired his club from his infield spot, and no one ever accused Grimm and Terry of handicapping their clubs while they were in their prime. And the Cubs never could have won in 1938 if Gabby Hartnett had not wielded his big bat with as much influence as he did his managerial strategy.

And how about Lou Boudreau's job with Cleveland four years ago? Marty Marion, who had no peers at shortstop, was unable to play last year while he managed the Cards, and his team went nowhere. Marty, in playing condition, could have compiled a far better managerial record.

There is no moral—no conclusion to be drawn from this article. Just a series of examples to go along with the sudden re-appearance of the playing-manager. Like a contagion, it could spread
