SYD COHEN:

What Happened To Little League

Most of you undoubtedly saw and appreciated Frank Lanning's wonderful cartoon in the Bulletin recently depicting the opening of the Little League baseball season in Cranston. Some of you must have wondered, on seeing that cartoon, what ever happened to Little League in Providence, especially after all the talk about it, and all the meetings that were held a few months ago.

As chairman of the committee that put in many long evenings and considerable effort toward the establishment of Little League in Providence, it is difficult, and painful, to admit that nothing has happened, that there will be no leagues in Providence this year.

Yet, we did not fail completely in our mission. That very Cranston league already mentioned is a direct outgrowth of the committee; and considerable assistance was given to the formation of a similar league in East Providence.

There is promise, too, for the future, as a result of our committee's work; and this will be borne out, I am sure, by facts to be related in this story.

Nonetheless, it must be admitted that we did fail to form Little leagues throughout Providence, as was the original plan, and in view of all the noise we made, an explanation must now be given.

You may remember that the Providence Little League organization began under the sponsorship of the Comets Club. These boys provided the stimulus that led to the formation of the committee. Meetings were held every Monday night at the Journal building, and slowly but surely the project began to take shape.

A small group from Cranston who attended our first meetings immediately went to town in their own community and formed a four team league that is now in operation. A Pawtucket delegation working on still another league came for help and advice.

Getting sponsors to pay the way for the leagues was a problem, but it was overcome. We got the sponsors, and hardly scratched the surface. Fields were said to be out of the question, but we got two fields, and had possibilities of a few more.

Harry Platt, one of the original and hardest workers on the committee, now proposed to lay the Little League idea before the Juvenile Court of R. I., which might naturally be expected to endorse and support it. Harry brought the plan to George Katz of the Juvenile Court, who in turn presented it to Judge McCabe.

It turned out that the Judge was highly interested. He liked the idea, had read a lot about it—and his son wanted to become a Little Leaguer. He thought it would make a good project for Juvenile Court and immediately had a series of meetings in his chambers with several public officials, including leaders of communal agencies and departments that also deal with programming for boys.

To all intents and purposes, the original committee then ceased to exist, since Juvenile Court intended to sponsor Little League in every section of Providence, a task which was too stupendous in the first year for the Comets and their affiliates. It seemed that our job was done. We had announced that we intended to function only long enough to get the ball rolling—and, well, that ball was picking up speed.

It turned out that disbanding the committee was a mistake, for Judge McCabe became ill and was unable to push the project. By the time he had recovered, he was reported to have decided that it was too late to get all the leagues going on time and with complete organization for the 1951 season; and rather than start it in one section and ignore another, he thought it best to hold off one more year.

George Katz reports the Court's intention to start planning in the fall of this year for the city-wide establishment of Little League in 1952. With the interest already created, with the sponsors, fields, parents and other personnel who have contacted us and offered their services, it seems certain that baseball for youngsters from eight to twelve will be on a firm footing long before the first game gets under way next June.

That's why you must agree that our committee was not a failure despite the lack of Little League baseball in Providence this year. Yet, despite the fact that we cannot justifiably be blamed for what happened, we (and I speak for all the members of the committee) do regret not having maintained our group as a potent working force, operating as a unit under Juvenile Court. Had we done so, at least two or three leagues would have been formed.

When you think of all that has been done, don't forget that it all came about because the Comets blazed the pioneer trail. Without their sponsorship, there probably would be no talk about Little League today.

So, if you don't mind, I want to salute the Comets—Nate Ludmah, Sam Berman, Warren Foster, Seymour and Sheldon Golden, Syd Jacobson, Jake Chaiken and all the others who attended the meetings or supported the project in their club room. We'll get together again in the fall, I hope, and this time we will succeed.
