See No "Preventive War" In Ouster of Sharett

WASHINGTON — Israel's change in foreign ministers was believed today to represent more a shift in the "style" rather than the "substance" of its foreign policy.

The resignation of Foreign Minister Sharett and the designation of Mrs. Golda Myerson as his successor, does not, Israeli sources indicated, mean a move toward preventive war.

To the extent that "moderation" vs. "adventurism" has been an issue in Israeli politics, Sharett's line of moderation has been accepted by the country.

But both Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, with whom Sharett has carried on a feud of many years—standing, and Mrs. Myerson, are considered tougher people in negotiations than the outgoing foreign minister.

Moscow is, as likely to feel the impact of that toughness as the West. Some Israeli sources were insisting, in fact, that whatever policy significance the shift has, related basically to its timing.

They noted that it came just as Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov arrived in Cairo to discuss a further strengthening of Arab-Soviet ties.

The Herald-Tribune reported today that the Israeli government has invited Shepilov to include Israel in his Middle Eastern itinerary.

The invitation has not been answered, but if Shepilov does stop off in Israel he will hear some plain speaking from Ben-Gurion and Mrs. Myerson.

Both Anti-Communist

Both of them are outspoken anti-Communists. Long before it became fashionable, Ben-Gurion termed Stalin, "the Georgian thug." And Mrs. Myerson, Russian-born, American-educated Minister of Labor was at one time Israeli Minister in Moscow. The treatment of the Jews that she witnessed there confirmed her in her anti-communism.

Sharett also is a firm anti-Communist, but his instincts are those of conciliation and negotiation.

MOSCOW GOES KOSHER

NEW YORK — Soviet meat shops in Jewish neighborhoods will soon be selling kosher meat in Moscow and the government will open kosher restaurants, Moscow's Chief Rabbi, M. Schliffer, announced at the Shevuoth service, according to a cable to the New York Times.

Home Workers Asked To Turn In Outstanding Cards

The membership drive of the Jewish Home for the Aged which got underway June 5 is showing good results it was announced this week. Chairman of the membership committee, Harry Blacher, and Maurice Fox, co-chairmen, hope that the goal will be reached if and when the campaigners will turn in the outstanding 800 cards.

A final report meeting is scheduled for Thursday, June 28.

The chairmen urge all campaigners to cover their cards as quickly as possible, so that the Home can bring the campaign to a successful completion before summer vacations start.

DULLES REFUSES

WASHINGTON — Rep. Celler (D-N.Y.) says Secretary Dulles "arbitrarily" refuses to see a delegation of 16 New York Democratic House members who want to discuss the Middle East crisis with him.

He said Dulles insisted he would only see three of the group, and was adamant against seeing the full delegation.

Eban Recalled; Key Role Seen

NEW YORK—Israeli circles at the UN today expected that Ambassador Abba Eban will emerge a key figure in the current foreign ministry reorganization.

Eban was summoned back to Israel yesterday. There were reports that if the appointment were acceptable to the other parties in Premier Ben-Gurion's cabinet, Eban would be named deputy foreign minister to Mrs. Golda Myerson.

Eban's elevation would be reassuring to the West and would strengthen the view that the departure of Moshe Sharett from the cabinet does not portend any drastic shift in Israeli foreign policy.

Not only is Eban completely identified with Sharett's line of moderation, but he has even been criticized in the Israeli press for unduly optimistic reports on Washington's attitude toward Israel.

Should Eban be shifted to Jerusalem, with a likelihood that he would later become foreign minister, Israeli circles believe that Eliahu Elath, now ambassador in London, would take over the Washington position.

Danny Kaye a Hit in Israel — Israel's "sabras" or native-born children turn the tables on Danny Kaye, recent visitor to the Land of the Bible, by playing the "halilit" or shepherd's flute for him. "Sabra" is the Hebrew name for cactus plant. The children are affectionately called "sabra" because they too are "sweet and soft on the inside, but rough on the outside." Sturdy, self-confident, always smiling and singing, Israel's "sabras" reflect the beauty of the Land of the Bible.

Israel Seeks Tougher U. S. Policy on Egypt

WASHINGTON—Israel was reported this week to be intensifying efforts to convince the West, especially the U. S., to harden its policy against Egypt.

This diplomatic effort draws strength from two events: The completion this week of Britain's evacuation from Egypt's Suez area, and the watering down of a UN Middle East resolution last week at Arab and Soviet insistence.

Israel, it was learned, is telling the State Dept. that events by now should have convinced Western officials that the Egyptian regime of Premier Nasser is aggressive and expansionist and is not truly dedicated to internal development.

So far, this Israeli campaign has produced no shift in U.S. policy. But there are reports of a growing receptiveness to such arguments.

The Israelis argue there are three basic assumptions, at least, inherent in the agreement under which Britain quit the Suez Zone:

That Egypt, under Nasser, would be a bulwark and a base for the West against communism in the Middle East.

That Nasser's government would be receptive toward reconciling the Arab-Israel dispute.

That Nasser would stress social and economic development in Egypt.

Instead, the Israelis contend, the Egyptians have co-operated with the Soviet bloc, and Nasser directs his country's attention to an arms buildup instead of internal development.

Assail Russian Silence On Fate of 450 Jews

NEW YORK—The Congress of Jewish Culture charged today that Soviet Ambassador Zarubin had ignored repeated inquiries seeking to determine the fate of some 450 Jewish leaders since Stalin's ruthless purge of Jewish culture in the late 1940s.

The disclosure was made as a group of leaders of the international organization issued a denunciation of the "frightful acts of genocide" perpetrated by the Stalin regime and "apparently still condoned" by the Kremlin.

Inquiries concerning the 450 writers, painters, actors, musicians and other prominent cultural leaders have been made by the Congress since shortly after Stalin's death. In the last query, sent to Zarubin April 5, the group said:

"Jewish public opinion has the right and duty to demand . . . information as to the fate of the Jewish writers and their families—and especially as to what measure your government is taking to reestablish the right to exist of the Jewish press, Jewish theater, the Jewish school, Yiddish literature and public assembly."

The Jewish Labor Committee, meanwhile, made public a communication from the State Dept. asserting that the new Soviet regime had never repudiated Stalin's anti-Jewish "cosmopolitan purge" of 1948-49.

"Apart from the rehabilitation of a few writers," it quoted the State Dept. as reporting, "improvement in the status of Soviet Jews during the post-Stalin period has not been great . . . The basic policy of restricting Jewish cultural activity . . . remains unchanged."

BIG Day Drive Nets Record Of $56,450 in Bond Sales

Having hit a record BIG Day total of $56,450, in Israel Bond sales in an intensive 10-day campaign which culminated last Sunday, 500 volunteers, active in the drive, attended a "Thank-You" party at Congregation Shaare Zedek last Wednesday evening.

A Wittnauer watch was presented to Mrs. Arthur Einstein for selling the largest number of Bonds, while a Benrus watch was presented to Mrs. Samuel Michaelson for selling the largest amount in dollar value of Bonds in connection with the door-to-door campaign. The awards, which were based exclusively on sales made after May 14, were contributed by local merchants.

The party, which celebrated the attainment of $188,750, to date in Bond Sales for 1956, the largest amount realized in an Israel Bond Campaign since 1952, was an informal victory affair for all Israel Bond volunteers. Numerous Chen charms were awarded to women on the basis of one charm for each cash total of sales and purchases of $2,500. There are twelve charms in all, depicting the original tribes of Israel. Largest number of charms earned in Providence to date is four, awarded to Mrs. Harry Chaet.

Rabbi Eli A. Bohnen, who was praised at the party for "his outstanding leadership in rallying Providence Jewry behind this vital program for investment in Israel's economy," spoke briefly, thanking the BIG Day co-chairmen and all the volunteers for their "wonderful cooperation."

Julius C. Michaelson and Mrs. Beryl Segal, BIG Day co-chairmen, also addressed the group.

Mrs. Janet-Lee Friedman, lyric soprano, sang several semi-classical selections and was enthusiastically greeted by the audience. Mrs. Friedman was accompanied by Mrs. Mildred Field.

FRANKLIN, MASS. — Raising a calloused hand to shade his eyes, Israel Garelick looked over his verdant, sprawling farmlands and observed, "Things look pretty good."

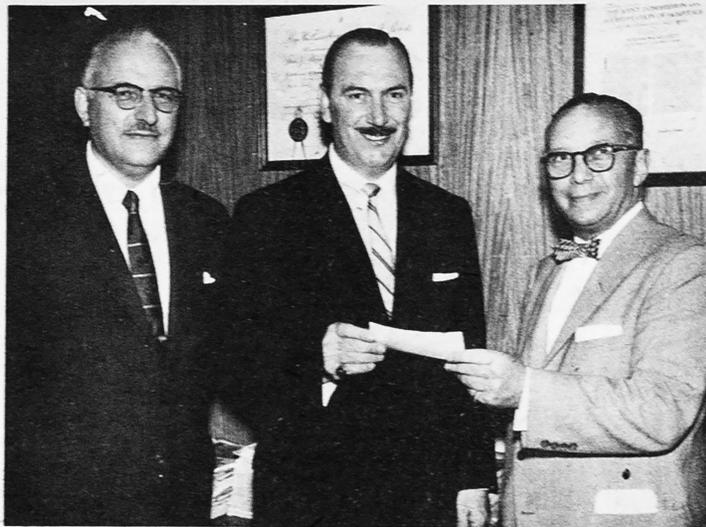

This modest summation of a quarter-century of steady growth typifies the president and treasurer of Garelick Bros. Farms, which will be the scene of an open house on Sunday, marking the 25th anniversary of the establishment of the farm on Route 140, near the Bellingham town line.

After 25 years, Garelick still works as hard as any of his 85 employecs, supervising many details of operating a big modern dairy farm.

The corporation now includes Garelick as president and treasurer, his son, Dan, as vice president, and a brother-in-law, Dave Richmond as secretary. They are directors of the business along with Paul Bernon and Lillian Garelick.

Dan Garelick, who is in charge of Sunday's elaborate open house program, said today that while there were many contributing factors in the development of the business, "probably the most important one is strict adherence to the high standards we set for ourselves."

Year by year the plant has expanded internally and externally.

The basic plant in Franklin is on land which covers some 400 acres, and includes three huge Grade A Barns. The Garelick herd, one of the largest in the East, currently numbers more than 800 cows.

In 1949, the firm acquired the Lincoln Woods Farm in Lincoln, R. I.

Today 30 delivery trucks cover almost two-score communities in Rhode Island and Southern Massachusetts, traveling 1,500 miles daily to serve Garelick and Lincoln Woods customers. Included is Providence.

One highlight of the program will be the announcing of the winner of the Disneyland contest. The firm for the past two months has been conducting an essay contest for students through Junior High School, on the subject,

"What I Want To Be When I Grow Up." Close to 1,000 entries have been submitted.

The winner gets an all-expense trip for three people to Disneyland in California, some time during the summer of 1956.

Restricted Tours

There is a certain momentum about the process of concession to bigotry. It all begins when the government—for reasons of allegedly high diplomatic and military expediency—accepts Saudi Arabia's ban on Jewish military personnel in American installations there. Our officials deplore the ban and voice their regrets, but, after all, the realities must be faced and accepted. Or so they tell us.

This spineless submission, we soon learn, sets a fashion. Now comes the disclosure that the highly-respected and respectable National Education Association is sponsoring a series of teacher tours to Arab lands—but Jewish teachers are banned from the trips in deference to the dictates of the Arab rulers.

Once again, as in the case of military personnel, the restriction is officially deplored by those who have bowed to it. But the ban prevails, despite the pious expressions of regret.

To put it simply, the leaders of the NEA should be ashamed of themselves.

If they were sponsoring an educational tour to a Communist-ruled country, would they agree to exclude anti-Communists from the trip? If they were running a junket to South Africa, would they let the doctrine of apartheid restrict their personnel? If they were conducting a journey to Franco Spain, would they let Franco bar anti-Fascists?

On many occasions the NEA has gone on record against intolerance. All those worthy resolutions are rendered hollow by this craven capitulation to the Arab exclusion laws.

In The Red In 1951 In The Chips In 1956

By Richard Rutter

Once upon a time there was a little company named Pennsylvania Coal and Coke. It lost some $100,000 a year mining coal.

Once upon a time was just five years ago. Today, what was a struggling little company is the parent of a $100,000,000 industrial empire. Was it magic? No, it was the potent spell of Leopold D. Silberstein, a real-life financial wizard.

Mr. Silberstein, 52 years old and German-born, is president and chairman of the Penn-Texas Corporation, a complex of fifteen highly diverse operations. Its subsidiaries operate coal mines and steamships, produce oil and gas, prospect for uranium and make machine tools, aircraft parts, power shovels and firearms. Assets in 1950: $4,600,000. Assets in 1955: $104,000,000.

Along his path to fame and fortune, Leopold D. Silberstein met and conquered many a dragon. Twice he overrode strong management opposition to gain control of companies. His most dramatic contest, however, came to a climax just last week. After a bitter proxy fight, Penn-Texas placed four directors on the eleven-man board of Fairbanks, Morse & Co., big Chicago maker of locomotives and other industrial equipment.

This might be regarded as, at best, a partial victory. Not so, says the ebullient Mr. Silberstein. He insists that all Penn-Texas wanted was representation at Fairbanks, rather than control.

efforts to bring sectarian teachings into our public schools, we need to ask again and again how those who hold that their faith is the sole truth can expect this traditional position to hold up in the give and take of classroom teaching.

Thus, when one examines the following passage from Living Our Faith, a Catholic high school textbook, one wonders what will happen to such a view in the broad arena of the public school classroom:

"Counterfeit Religions: The material, size and shape of the paper and metal money in the United States is determined and authorized by the Government. No other money is legal tender, and any other agency issuing such money is guilty of counterfeiting. In the same way, non-Catholic methods of worshipping God must be branded counterfeit."

Dangers in Issue

Yes, the campaign now stepped up to full blast in New York, Indiana, Florida and other sections of the country, designed to bring religious teachings into the public schools, is no small matter. The chances for misunderstanding, accusation and acrimonious debate are strong, indeed.

And when the magazine, America, asks if Jews shouldn't try to adapt themselves to the felt needs of the entire community, one may well say that the reply is: "Most certainly, Jews should. And so should Catholics. And so should Protestants. And high on the list of those felt needs is the need to keep religion a sacredly private matter, to keep the public schools from becoming arenas for creedal indoctrination and to keep church and state separated in the best American tradition"

The Penn-Texas and the Silberstein saga are one and the same. The story, as dramatic as any in the recent annals of American industry, actually goes back to the troubled Thirties.

Refugee From Germany

Young Leopold Silberstein, already versed in high finance, quit Germany early in the Hitler regime. He turned up eventually in Shanghai, where he spent most of World War II assisting other refugees. There followed a sojourn in England, where Mr. Silberstein acquired an interest in R. & G. Pullman, Ltd., a leather company. He is still a director of the British concern.

In 1948 Mr. Silberstein brought his family to the United States. He became a naturalized citizen in 1953.

On his arrival in this country, Mr. Silberstein dabbled, with considerable success, in New York real estate. He also formed his own investment company, Uno Equities, Inc., which dealt chiefly in special situations over the counter. By 1950, armed with a tidy capital, the financier began to look around for "sick" companies that might be profitably nourished back to health.

Pennsylvania Coal and Coke filled the bill as one of the "sickest" companies in a sick industry. With the help of friends Leopold Silberstein began to accumulate stock. When he took control in May, 1951, he had better than 51 per cent of the 148,000 outstanding shares. His personal investment was $100,000.

The new management promptly began to mechanize, installing $2,000,000 worth of continuous mining equipment. It enabled 300 miners to extract 1,000,000 tons in 1952, a job that had previously required some 1,200 men. The company also spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on safety devices. Mr. Silberstein personally visited the mines at least sixty times during the first year of his control. By the end of 1951, Pennsylvania Coal and Coke was in the black.

By then, too, natural gas was becoming an increasingly sharp competitor. Mr. Silberstein met the problem by a program of diversification.

Penn-Texas (the new name was adopted in 1954) began to branch out, modestly enough, by buying three cargo ships. These were put into service around the world.

Since he could not lick the natural gas industry, Mr. Silberstein decided to join it. In October, 1953, Penn-Texas formed a wholly owned subsidiary—the Tex-Penn Oil and Gas Corporation. Tex-Penn had a 51 per cent interest and the Moody Texas Oil Corporation 49 per cent in properties near Corpus Christi, Tex. The properties now comprise 116 oil and gas producing wells on 16,000 acres. William L. Moody 3d, member of one of Texas' oldest and wealthiest families, is president of Tex-Penn.

Mergers Multiply

The acquisitions began to come fast and lucrative. For instance, Penn-Texas bought the Crescent Company, a Pawtucket, R. I., maker of insulated copper wire and cable. Annual sales have exceeded $5,000,000. In July, 1953, Penn-Texas bought from Robert R. Young a 48 per cent interest in the Industrial Brownhoist Corporation of Bay City, Mich. The price was about $13 a share for 223,991 shares. A minority stockholders' battle to prevent Mr. Silberstein from acquiring complete control collapsed when Penn-Texas offered them $16 a share.

In 1954 Penn-Texas acquired the Quick-Way Truck Shovel Company of Denver. The company produces earth-moving equipment and has sales of some $3,000,000 a year. Next came the Bayway Terminal Corporation, which owns a big (1,000,000 square foot) terminal in Elizabeth, N. J. Space in the buildings, worth about $5,000,000, is rented to such companies as Goodyear and Western Electric.

Later the same year Leopold Silberstein found himself involved in his first major proxy fight. Penn-Texas picked up 80,000 shares of Niles - Bement - Pond Company, large machine tool maker in West Hartford, Conn. Mr. Silberstein asked for five places on the fourteen-member board. The request was refused. The proxy contest followed.

Result: Penn-Texas showed up at a special stockholders' meeting voting 61 per cent of Niles-Bement-Pond stock. Following the formal change of ownership, the company name was changed to Pratt & Whitney Company, Inc. (no relation to United Aircraft's Pratt & Whitney division).

Last year the acquisition parade continued. Maj. Gen. C. T. (Buck) Lanham was installed as chairman of Colt's Manufacturing Company when Penn-Texas took over.

That was hardly done, when Liberty Products Corporation of Farmingdale, L. I., a manufacturer of precision aircraft parts, was added to the Penn-Texas stable. And only a few weeks ago Hallicrafters Company, Chicago television and electronic equipment maker, joined the group.

All of these many transactions have involved intricate financial arrangements—of which Leopold Silberstein is an acknowledged master. Borrowing from banks played a part, but in most cases the purchases were consummated by exchange of Penn-Texas stock for that of the acquired companies. Between 1953 and 1955 the number of common shares outstanding rose from 265,000 to more than 3,000,000.

Penn-Texas also has 421,663 shares of convertible preferred outstanding. Mr. Silberstein himself owns fewer than 15,000 of the common shares, or about one-half of 1 per cent. However, his family and associates have sizable holdings.

No Publicity Seeker

What kind of man is Leopold Silberstein? He is a man who doesn't particularly like to be interviewed and has always shunned the limelight. He hardly appears the model of a Rothschild-trained financier. He is short, stocky, impeccably dressed. He speaks fluently and often eloquently, with a strong accent. The effect is one of considerable poise and charm.

The head of Penn-Texas has become a figure of controversy much against his will. He has been attacked and lauded in Congress, denounced and extolled in the business world.

Nothing, however, has shaken the strong loyalty given to Mr. Silberstein by his associates. General Lanham puts it this way:

"There are three words for Leopold. He is honest, compassionate—and a genius."

But how do you explain a genius?

As We Were Saying:

On Introducing a 4th 'R' Into Our Public Schools

By ROBERT E. SEGAL

Tucked away in a corner of the final report on the recent White House Conference on Education were welcome words of caution about attempts to put the Fourth "R" — Religion — into the public schools.

The report emphasized that the problems arising from the aim to foster moral, ethical and spiritual values in the student involve "widely different convictions about fundamental issues of theology and about the respective responsibilities of family, church and school in religious education."

And then the report went on to say that the recognition of the principle of separation of church and state is the approach to solving the problem.

The sober pronouncement is a good antidote for such exasperating propositions as that made a few weeks ago by the Catholic magazine, America, in connection with the growing opposition to a New York proposal on religious teaching in the public schools.

America didn't like Rabbi Edward E. Klein's forthright statement: "Let us be Catholics, Protestants and Jews in churches and synagogues and homes, but in the classrooms of America, we must be Americans all." Said America:

"To Jews, with their firm bond of family and synagogue life, a secularized school presents no great problem . . . But to millions of Christian families, who feel that religious values, cannot be departmentalized in the family circle, a Godless public school is a profanation. Shouldn't Jews try to adapt themselves to the felt needs of the entire community?"

It becomes increasingly clear that dangerous assumptions are being made by those who now clamor for the introduction of religious teachings in the public schools. The assumptions include:

1—The cruel oversimplification holding that those of us who stand firm for traditional separation of church and state are rearing "Godless public schools."

2—The assumption that simply by setting up a demand for the teaching of "moral and spiritual values" in the public schools, one is going to fool people into believing that moral and spiritual values are not being taught in the public schools.

(Speaking for the National Education Association, William G. Carr has well stated: "Public schools have always been concerned with the teaching of moral and spiritual values. If one scratches the surface of the criticism, one will often discover that what the critics really mean is that the public schools are not teaching religion.")

3—The assumption that if and when the campaign to inject religious teachings in the public schools is put over, everybody is going to get a fair break.

Ascribe Cause

Those who now drive the camel towards the tent have a sales approach innocent enough. Look at the problems that beset us, they say: juvenile delinquency, godless communism, moral laxity, gambling, drinking. These evils exist because children are not being taught religion.

Writing in the March 22, 1956, issue of The Reporter, William Lee Miller has demolished this facile thesis and allied misconceptions with devastating accuracy. Noting that America is seeking eagerly for a "faith" to match the communists, he observed that "the nation is trying to find, all at once and in a hurry, religion, morality and a heritage."

Such goals cannot be achieved by fiat, he reasoned as he bemoaned the tendency to think that many now prescribe religion for what ails us, because "like Chesterfields, religion satisfies." Religion is promoted "for its helpfulness in meeting pre-existing needs and desires; a possibility that it might transform, criticize, or negate those desires is not included," he pointed out.

Charge Of 'Counterfeit'

Aside from expressing amazement and dismay at the completely unwarranted attacks on those who stand firm against current

Broadway Understudies:

THE SHADOW 'STARS'

By Robert Williams

Dina Peskin is not a superstitious girl.

The hazel-eyed Israeli actress, who scored a stunning success recently when she filled in for Susan Strasberg in the difficult Broadway role of "Anne Frank," does not waste her time crossing her fingers or knocking on wood. She'll walk under a ladder.

But she and Joan Copeland, who understudies four other headliners in the poignant "Dairy" of the indomitable "Anne," are playing a little game with Lady Luck backstage at the Cort Theater.

They're going to paint their dressing room—and await developments.

Something's gotta give.

Through month after month, since the opening last October, the two sat and waited for a call to go on stage.

Then Miss Copeland decided to make curtains for their dressing room.

Almost immediately she was called to play.

She returned to the curtains, finished them and started work on a dress.

Came another call.

Time passed. Director Garson Kanin surprised Dina with a phonograph and a set of long-play records of American poetry to help her English during The Long Wait.

Suddenly, she was called to replace the ailing Miss Strasberg through five performances.

Susan Strasberg
The star

"So now we're going to paint the dressing room," said Miss Peskin. "I wonder what will happen."

Miss Copeland "can't wait to get the paint into the theater."

Dina Peskin, a product of Habimah, the national theater of Israel, is a sentimental young lady of 21.

She was overjoyed by the opportunity to play "Anne," after waiting through 199 performances.

But cast members noted that she quietly placed a "Welcome Home" bouquet of flowers on Miss Strasberg's dressing table when the star recovered from laryngitis and returned to the role.

"Many people ask me if this jealousy or tensy that usually exists between a star and an understudy exists between us," said Dina. "I just can't see it."

"Susan is a wonderful girl. I think I know what she is going through. It's wonderful to develop so marvelously as she is developing as an actress. But it's very difficult, too. I think she is taking it so nicely, so gracefully.

"I'm older by a few years than she is, but we are just the same age, I feel.

"We are playing a part that is so dear to us both I don't think there could be any conflict between us. She is 'Anne Frank' on stage and I am 'Anne' offstage, you might say."

It is not easy to fill in for a star, especially a youthful one of Miss Strasberg's unique and brilliant stature. But Dina Peskin did not come to Broadway unprepared.

From her primary school days, she appeared in the children's

Dina Peskin
The understudy

theater her mother maintained in the private school she operated in Tel Aviv for children of working parents—and later, children rescued from orphaned desolation in Germany after the Nazi scourge.

In her teens, she was accepted in the exclusive and exacting Habimah.

She did her turn as a messenger during Israel's war for independence. She underwent basic training for the Israeli army. She appeared in the first full-length movie produced in the then new republic, "Faithful City."

Habimah Sent Her Here for Training

It was the decision of Habimah and the Israeli government to send her here for further training as an actress. She is a graduate of Sanford Meisner's Neighborhood Playhouse School and a member of his Workshop. She is, in addition, an accomplished dancer.

"Something wonderful" happened when she was finally summoned to play "Anne."

Joseph Schildkraut took pains, making the announcement of Miss Strasberg's illness, to dissuade any disappointed members of the audience from leaving.

Meisner's training served valuably.

"I was backstage, preparing," said Dina. "I was already half-Anne and half-Dina. I knew the announcement would bring that inevitable disappointed 'ohhhh,' from the audience. I didn't want to hear it, but I couldn't help it."

"Then a miracle happened. I remembered Mr. Meisner had taught me to be alert to what was happening around me and try to absorb it and reflect it. I suddenly began accepting the audience reaction as Anne.

"You must remember that Anne was a girl who was not liked by everybody. She grated on the nerves of some people, who didn't understand her. She was insecure with her mother and her sister. I used this situation. I just thought of the audience as another group of people who did not accept Anne."

Her portrayal of the little Jewish girl who never lost faith through the two years she hid out in an Amsterdam garret with her family and friends during the Nazi occupation won the deep respect of audience and cast members alike, particularly the veteran Schildkraut.

An Old Tradition Not Forgotten

Something else happened that night.

Years before, when Dina undertook her first childish role in the Habimah, one of the oldest actors in the company walked over to her, put his arms around her and spit three times over her shoulder, for good luck.

"Here it was my first time on Broadway, like an opening night," she said, "and I must admit I kind of thought, 'This time I must go on with no spitting over my shoulders.'"

But just before she went on stage, Gusti Huber, who plays "Anne's" mother surprised her.

"She walked over to me and did the same thing," said Dina. "Apparently it is an international thing. It was such a wonderful surprise."

Since June of 1953, when Miss Peskin arrived here, a great many things have happened to her. She made a publicity tour for the film, "Faithful City." She did another tour, dancing, for the Zionist Organization of America. For a time, she appeared on the Voice of America, delivering broadcasts in Hebrew to Israel.

She Found Out What Stardom Can Mean

But her first encounter with the peculiar American brand of fandom did not take place until she filled the role of "Anne." She found out rapidly what attaining stardom can mean—and not mean.

On the first occasion, she emerged from the theater into a pushing crowd of autograph seekers.

"It startled me that anyone should ask for my autograph," she said. "First a young boy asked for my signature and I scribbled it on a piece of paper and handed it to him. He didn't even look at it. He said, 'Who are you?' I thought that was strange, being asked for an autograph and then asked who you are."

"After that, I didn't scribble my name. I made it very plain and clear. I almost printed it so they'd be sure to read it and remember me."

On the second occasion, she dashed along 48th St. to Sixth Ave. and hurriedly climbed aboard a bus, before discovering she had no change, just a $5 bill.

The driver threw her off.

Dina, who shares an East Side walkup with a non-theatrical friend, Hadassah Insebuch, a kindergarten teacher, is still adjusting herself to the pace of this strange land after almost three years.

She does not view marriage with any sense of urgency—"If it happens tomorrow, it's tomorrow; if it happens in three years, three years"—but there is a young man in the picture.

'I Have My Eye On Him' He Has His Eye on Me'

"There is somebody," she said, "but I just have my eye on him and he has his eye on me but they don't meet just yet."

"I'll tell you something I've found out, though," she said. "I find, for example, parents—so many times a father—will be terrifically fascinated by me and very directly say, 'I have a son, he's a wonderful boy about six feet so-and-so and you know I would love to have you meet him.'"

"The first few times I heard it, I was really so shocked. I didn't know what to say, but I liked it. But parents in Israel don't do that at all. I met one or two of the sons but, with these kind of parents, you know the boys are the 'good boys' type."

"I'm not very good at this subject yet."

One of Dina's happiest memories was her brief stint in the army.

"I had the best time of my life for six weeks," she said.

Her most thrilling memory is of the underground and her role as messenger.

"I was bringing notes to important people," she said, "and I felt terribly important like I had the whole responsibility for the Republic of Israel. I was so tiny no Britisher would ever think I was carrying anything important. I was only 15 or 16."

Putting Up Posters Was Part of the Job

"We also used to put up propaganda posters and placards to excite sentiment against the British. One day the glue and posters were left in our place overnight and it was scary because they could make a curfew any time and search the place."

But, in retrospect...

"I think it is so healthy for the children, because all these jobs had to be done, to feel that they are needed and have a responsibility. It would be good in any country. It is unfortunate when things are getting better and people have comforts that they lose the main things—the sense of belonging to one another and the mutuality of life."

"We have to think about it in Israel and not get spoiled."

Although she loves New York, "home is home," and she will ultimately return to Israel.

In the meantime, between shows, she studies with a drama coach, with a dancing teacher, and with an English teacher. She relaxes by strolling through department stores. She cannot yet restrain her excitement over the "plenty" she finds everywhere here.

Brodsky and Segal Receive Jewish Education Citations

Irving Brodsky and Beryl Segal received the annual Jewish education citations awarded to community leaders who have made important contributions to Jewish education. The citations were presented at the annual meeting of the Bureau by the outgoing president, Max Winograd.

The citation to Irving Brodsky reads as follows:
At a time of a national critical shortage of personnel for our Jewish schools, the American Association for Jewish Education invited six communities of which Providence was one to convene Regional Conferences on the serious problem of Jewish educational personnel. Mr. Irving Brodsky was appointed by the Bureau as Regional Chairman for this area. With a sense of deep obligation and with a determination to do a thorough piece of work, Mr. Brodsky applied himself zealously to the task and inspired his co-workers on his Committee with a similar feeling of responsibility. Hearings were held, reports were studied and a Regional Conference was convened from which emerged an important eight-point statement which will be delivered at the National Conference in Washington, D. C. in November. Thus, through the efforts of Mr. Brodsky and his Committee, our community was enabled this year to make its contributions to the National thinking on a serious Jewish educational issue. We are happy to honor Mr. Brodsky for his important contribution during the 1955-56 year.

The citation to Beryl Segal reads as follows:

Teacher, author, journalist of the community, he has given his lucid and impressive pen for the continuous interpretation of the needs of Jewish education in all its manifestations. He has taken it upon himself to bring a vital and vibrant message on the needs of Jewish education to all residents of our state whenever the need existed. Without any urging or prompting and only in accordance with the dictates of his own insight, he sounded a clarion call for Hebrew culture, Hebrew language, Jewish values and Jewish education. We are happy to honor him tonight.

Day School Ladies Elect New Officers

Mrs. Maurice Gereboff was elected president of the Ladies Association and P.T.A. of the Providence Hebrew Day School at its final meeting held last week. Other officers are Mesdames Max Brodsky, honorary president; Morris L. Keller, Samuel Bresnick and Jack Marks, vice-presidents; Jack Feit, treasurer; William Newman, financial secretary; Maurice Gordon, recording secretary; Leonard Chernack and Earl Novich, corresponding secretaries.

Mrs. Joseph Dubin was honored as the Day School "Woman of the Year." She was presented with a plaque from the Ladies' Association in recognition of her work during the past year. Mrs. Keller made the presentation and also read the "Honor Roll" of Day School workers for 1955-56.

A report of the donor luncheon held recently was given by Mrs. Samuel Yolin. Refreshments were served. Hostesses for the evening were Mesdames Samuel Grossman, Israel Schwartz, Benjamin Hayman, and Maurice Gereboff, ex-officio.

Center to Train Youth Leaders

A combined recreation and leadership training program for young teen agers will be offered by the Jewish Community Center this summer when the JCC's summer JACS program opens its five-week season on Monday, July 16.

The program, open to boys and girls 14 and 15 years of age who are Center members, and who qualify at a registration interview, will include picnics, outings, campfire programs, sightseeing trips, theatre parties, horseback riding, swimming and boating and many other summer activities, combined with a training program which will include indoor and outdoor workshops in arts and crafts, games and sports, informal dramatics, music and folk dancing and a thorough grounding in group mechanics.

On completion of this program, Center JACS (Junior Aides) become eligible for the Center's volunteer leadership program and will continue their training as counselors-in-training at the JCC day camps next summer.

Directing the program will be Arthur Eisenstein, JCC program director, Sol Kutner, JCC South Side Branch director, and Mrs. Leonard Rumlper.

Applications for enrollment interviews may be made by telephone or in writing at either Center building.

Petronella to Israel?

Larry Boardman, the newest sensation of the boxing world, is a Jewish lad from Connecticut. The explosive youngster, whose slugging has fans and promoters all sitting up and taking notice, is considered by some of the most respected judges of fighters as a cinch to win unto himself a world title.

Unless you heard Gus Parmet's tape-recorded interview with Tony Petronella, this will be news: Boxing's ace good will ambassador and international co-ordinator is considering the possibility of making a trip to Israel next year to promote professional boxing. The subject was broached to Tony only a few weeks ago, and he was intrigued with the idea. Boxing in Israel today is strictly on the amateur level, and Tony's aim would be to introduce professional boxing to the Israelis under the National Boxing Association. This column will have more on the subject of that trip soon.

Petronella told Parmet during that interview that he wouldn't be surprised if Israel some day produces a world's heavyweight champion. His reason for the belief is that the Jewish lads are "fighters". Tony cautioned, quite naturally, that it would take time.

It is always interesting to talk with Petronella about retired champion Rocky Marciano. No matter how many times Tony opens up on this topic, one of his favorite subjects, new anecdotes are always being revealed. In past years, including those before the Rock became champ, and longer still before most critics ever thought he would win the title, Tony related several stories that appeared in this column. Rocky's prodigious appetite, his unique conception of pain and how it feels to be "hurt" in the ring, his humbleness, his training methods, his rock-like muscles—all this and more came in for the Petronella story-telling treatment.

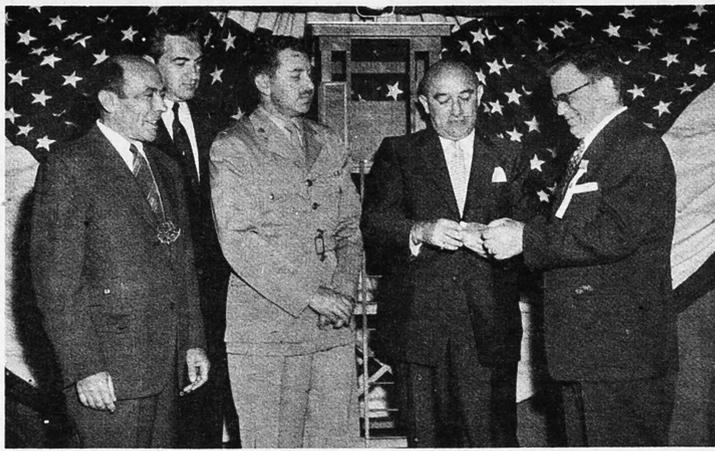

(Call it what you may, but this column first became convinced that Marciano would win the title because Tony Petronella said so; and what Tony said was good enough for me).

At any rate, Tony told me recently about the early days with Marciano, and how he (and others) tried to get Rocky rated before the NBA in 1949. Marciano then was just a wild, awkward slugger who had nothing but a punch, and the NBA officials laughed in the faces of the Rhode Island delegation.

A year later, after Rocky out-pointed Roland LaStarza, the NBA leaders relented. They finally gave the future champ a rating—tenth!

Tony was very close with Rocky, and extremely influential in the molding of the champ's fine career. But, thinking back to those early days, you could almost see him break out in a sweat as he recalled: "We had many sleepless nights with Rocky!"

Because of his intensive traveling schedule since becoming the international co-ordinator of boxing, Tony is said to do more roadwork (sitting down) than any fighter in history. Petronella is leaving for Europe this Sun—

Resort Charged With Prejudice

NEW YORK — A complaint charging The Homestead, all-year resort hotel in Hot Springs, Va., with "unlawful discriminatory practice" was filed this week with the New York State Commission Against Discrimination.

Mrs. David Kaplan, Jackson Heights, accused The Homestead, one of the nation's most prominent resorts, of having rejected her request for reservations "solely because of my being of the Jewish faith."

Her complaint is the first filed with SCAD against an out-of-state hotel.

Mrs. Kaplan charged that the alleged discrimination violated New York's anti-bias law because her application and its rejection were processed through The Homestead's New York booking office located in the Barclay Hotel, 111 E. 48th Street.

In her complaint, Mrs. Kaplan cites that last April 12th she applied for reservations for herself and her husband. Five days later, she says, a letter of rejection was sent her by Fay Ingalls, president of The Homestead, with the explanation "we have a very large clientele which returns year after year, and as our bookings stand today we have no space available for the summer."

However, affidavits submitted by Mrs. Kaplan with her complaint show that a request for similar reservations made later the same day by a Mrs. Valerie Griffith of Belle Harbor, L. I., were accepted and confirmed by the hotel.

Arnold Forster, chief counsel of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, to whom Mrs. Kaplan first brought the matter, said today that The Homestead "has a long and avowed record of barring Jewish patrons as part of its guest policy."

Tales In The Rough

Let's do a bit of personal road-work, in the form of golf stories, on the eve of the Herald's preparations for its annual golf tournament. These tales (every one of them sworn to be the truth, so help me!) come from the highest of reputable sources, but said sources must remain confidential.

One local golfer was having a bad day. The longer he played, the worse his game, as his temper smoldered toward an inevitable explosion. Finally, friend golfer got off a bad shot that was the last straw. The temper erupted volcano-wise, and he seethingly flung his club away, and into a thicket of dense brush.

Caddy and golfer searched with might and main, but the club could not be found; whereupon the golfer turned and delivered another volcanic blast, this one at the caddy, whom he castigated for not marking the spot where the club disappeared.

There was another chap who liked to talk to himself as he addressed the ball. One day, while touring the course in a foursome, he prepared to make a short putt, and spoke to himself thusly: "Come on, Louis (his name isn't really Louis), be careful! You've got to sink this one, Louis! It's important!"

"Wait a minute!" screamed another member of the foursome. "You can't do that! You're not supposed to talk when somebody's putting!"

Then there was the man, who must remain forever nameless, who was telling of the little woman's endeavors on the links. "The first three years," he said, "my wife played lousy golf. But this year she's in a slump."

The Bowling Challenge
Every year, following the Herald's Temple and Fraternal

Bowling tourneys, there takes place a challenge match between the two champions. For several years now, the match has been between the Beth El Brotherhood and Alpha Epsilon Pi Fraternity.

The record shows that the Temple Tourney champ always has won this challenge match, and Beth El kept the slate clean at the 1956 renewal held recently at the Garden City Lanes.

The score was Beth El 12, AEPi 4.

Beth El's B and D teams scored point sweeps, while the A team took three of its four points. AEPi managed to dominate only the C groupings with three points.

Len Goldman of Beth El ran far ahead of the field for individual honors with a lofty 398. He was followed by three teammates, Myer Jarcho 366, Joe Schwartz 363 and Vin DeCesaris 353, before Roy Kessler broke the monopoly with 348. Other leading scores were Warren Foster of Beth El, 345; Sid Dressler, AEPi, 341; Murray Trinkle, Beth El, 340; Merrill Temkin, AEPi, 338, and Phil Shaulson, Beth El, 337.

Shaulson had the high single, 145, followed by Goldman's 138 and 136, Trinkle 136, Jarcho 134 and 128, Alie Shatkin of Beth El, 134; DeCesaris 129; Kessler, and Milt Weissman of Beth El, 127.

The four Beth El teams rolled an impressive 6457, which breaks down to an average of 323 per man. AEPi trailed by 309 pins, their 20 keglers averaging 307. Each league had 36 strings of 100 or better, and Beth El edged AEPi 14 to 13 in the number of 300 scores. Team honors went to Beth El B, which posted the high three of 1740 and the top single of 615.
